

OVIDS
HEROICALL
Epistles.

Englished by W. S.

Variam pro laude pete —

more amibus
Naturam quam Tristam
The 24 Edition:

OVID'S HEROICAL Epistles.

Englighed by W. S.

*Veniam pro laude peto, nunc mitibus
Mutare Quaro Tristia.*

LONDON,

Printed for William Gilbertson, at the sign of the Bible without Newgate in Gilt- spur-street, 1663.

100
1000
10000 100000

TO THE VERTUOUS
LADIES,
AND GENTLEWOMEN
OF ENGLAND.

Our beauties (Ladies and Gentlewomen) are but types and shadows of the beauty of your vertuous minde, which is discerned by Noble and Courteous actions. I may therefore presume that

The Epistle.

Ovid's Heroical Epistles, chiefly translated for your sakes, shall find a gentle acceptance, suitable to your Heroical dispositions, for Courtesie and Ingenuity are the companions of Gentility. But those who claim this Title, and are degraded of it by their own vicious qualities, Ovid disclaims them. Virtue is an invisible gift, which is not discerned by the outward habit, but by speech and action, and a certain delectation in virtue, as Modesty, Temperance, and especially ly curtesie; to which Ovid doth appeal. For when Rome knew him famous, he was esteemed of Love and Ladies, so that he was fain to shadow the ambitious love of the Emperours daughter towards him under the vail of Corynna, but the Emperour saw through it, and banished him. Besides, these Epistles, in regard of their subject, have just relation to you, Ladies and Gentlewomen, being the complaint of Ladies and Gentlewomen for the absence of their Lovers; And that their sorrow may be more sensible, there is a Table prefixed, & adjoyning to the book, presenting the several Pictures of the Arguments of the Epistles. So much concerning the work, and the Author Ovid, now you expect a complement for the Dedication.

The Epistles.

Ladies and Gentlewomen, since this book of Ovid's which most Gentlemen could read before in Latin, is for your sakes come forth in English, it doth at first address it self a Suiter, to won your acceptance, that it may kiss your hands, and afterward have the lines thereof in reading sweetned by the odour of your breath, while the dead letters form'd into words by your divided lips, may receive new life by your passionate expression, and the words married in that Ruby-coloured Temple, may thus happily united, multiply your contentment. And in a word let this be.

A Servant with you to the Lady Virtue.
Wye Saltonstall.

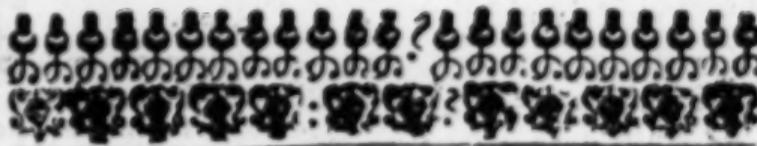

TO THE VERTUOUS
LADIES,
AND GENTLEWOMEN
OF
GREAT BRITAIN.

Of all the Poets, that in verse did reign
As Monarchs, none could equal Ovid's
Especially in the affairs of Love, (strain,
Ovid the Master of that Art did prove;
His fancies were so pleasing and so sweet,
That Love did wish no other winding sheet,
If he had mortal been, for he would die
To live again in his sweet Poesie.
When he intended to inflame the mind,
Or shew how Lovers proved too unkind,
As in these Epistles, where Ladies bemoan
Themselves, when their unkind lovers were gone;
He doth so mournfully express their passion,
In such a loving, and a lively fashion,
That

The Epistle.

That reading them grief will not let you speak,
Untill imprison'd tears from your eyes break;
Such passions in his Letters do appear,
That every word will make you drop a tear.
But you fair Gentlewomen of this Isle,
He would have you to glance one gentle smile
On his Epistles, stil'd Heroical,
Because by Lords and Ladies written all.
You know that Love is the Hearts pleasant tamer,
Whose motto is this, Omnia vincit Amor;
For he can with his lighted Torch enflame
As soon the Lord and Lady, as the Swain.
If then you hope to be happy in Love,
If other sorrows may your pity move,
If you the complaints of fair Ladies tender,
Which English doth for your contentment render
Unto your view, let these Epistles here,
Enjoy your beauteous favour, shining clear
On Ovid, belov'd by th' Emp'rs daughter,
For which by Cæsar he was banisht after;
Yet this his comfort was in Banishment,
His Love, and Lines, did yeild your sex content.
Let English Gentlewomen as kind appear
To Ovid, as the Roman Ladies were.

So wisheth, Wye Saltonstall.

THE INDEX.

ABydos a City in Asia, Ep. 17.
Achelous a river of Etolia, 9.
Achilles son of Peleus and Thetis, Ep. 3.
Acornius, signifies an Arrow, Ep. 19, 20.
Alceos beheld Diana bathing her self, and was transformed into a Stag, Ep. 20.
Aetas, a burning Mountain, Ep. 21.
Adonis the son of Cinyras, Ep. 4.
Egyptus brother to Belus, Ep. 14.
Aeneas son to Aachises and Venusti, Ep. 7.
Aeolus King of the winds, E. 10.
Alibra, Ep. 16.

Agamemnon Prince of the Grecians, Ep. 3.
Ajax, Ep. 3.
Alcions, Sea Birds, Ep. 17.
Alecto, one of the Furies, Ep. 2.
Androgeus, Minos son, Ep. 10.
Aadromache, Hector's wife, E. 5.
Aatilochus, Ep. 1.
Apollo god of Poetry, Physick, and Musick, Ep. 5, 6.
Ariadne Ep. 10.
Ariadnes Crown, a Constellation, Ep. 17.
Aescanius son to Aeneas, Ep. 7.
Athens a famous University, Ep. 2.
Atlas, a Mountain, Ep. 10.
Atreus son to Pelop, Ep. 10.
Aurora, or the morning, Ep. 4.

The Index.

B

Brisis a captive Virgin taken by Achilles, Ep. 3.

C

Cacus a Gyant, Ep. 9.
Canace Sister to Macareus, Ep. 11.

Carthage, a City of Lybia. E. 7.
Cassandra, a Prophetess who foretold the destruction of Troy, Ep. 15.

Cephalus signifies the head, E. 4.
Cerberus, Porter of hell, Ep. 9,

10.
Ceres, Goddess of corn and Plenty, Ep. 2.

Carybdis, a rocky gulf, Ep. 12.
Colchos, where the Golden Fleece was kept, Ep. 6.

Corinth, a City. Ep. 12.
Clymene, waiting maid to Helena, Ep. 16.

Crete, an Island, Ep. 16.
Cynthia, or the Moon, Ep. 17.

D

Dedalus who made himself and his son Icarus wings to fly withall, Ep. 17.
Daphne turned into a Lawrell-

tree, Epist. 21.

Deianira, Daughter to Oeneus King of Caledon, Ep. 9.

Deiphobus, or fearing the gods, Epist. 5.

Delos an Island, it signifies manifest or clear, from Δῆλος or Δῆλας.

Deucalion, who with his Wife Pyrrha survived after the general Deluge, Ep. 2.

Demophoon, signifies a light to the people by his exemplary Vertues, Ep. 2.

Diana, called Lucina, Ep. 19.

Dido, signifies to fear, Ep. 7.

Dolos, Ep. 1.

E

Elisa, or Dido, Epist. 7.
Elysian, Elysium was a fain'd place of joy for the dead, E. 3.
Endymion was beloved of the Moon, Ep. 17.

Euryalus King of the Mycenians, Ep. 9.

Eryxias, a Fairy.

Europa, signifies fair-faced, from whom the chiefest part of the world is called Europa, Ep. 4.

Hemens

The Index.

H

Hemus, a Mountain of Thrace, Ep. 2.

Hector, the valiantest of all the Trojans, Ep. 1.

Helen, wife to Menelaus, Ep. 5.

Helle, or the Sea wherein Helle was drowned, Ep. 8, 7.

Hercules begot by Jupiter in three nights on Alcmena in the shape of Amphitrio, Ep. 9.

Hermione, Epist. 8.

Hydra, a monster whose fruitfull heads would grow as they were lopped off, Ep. 9.

Hero, or a Noble Heroical Lady, Ep. 17.

Hymen, the god of marriage, Ep. 2.

Hypermnestra, Wife to Linus, Ep. 14.

Hippolitus was torn in pieces by his horses, Ep. 7.

Hyspibile Queen of Lemnos, Ep. 6.

I

Iason son to Eson, Ep. 6.

Icarus Penelopes father, Icarus 17.

Ideas, or Trojas, Ep. 9.

Iole Hercules's Mistrel, Ep. 9.

Isthmus, a neck of Land joyn-

ing two Continents together, having the Sea bearing on both sides, Ep. 4.

Juno, Jupiters Queen, Ep. 5.

L

Lacedemon, a City in Greece Ep. 15.

Laertes, Ep. 1.

Laadaria, Ep. 13.

Leander signifies a Lion-hearted man, Ep. 17.

Linus, husband to Hypermnestra, Ep. 14.

Lucina, the goddess of Childbirth, Ep. 5.

M

Macareus brother to Canace, Ep. 11.

Meander, a crooked winding River, Ep. 7.

Medea, a sorceress beloved by Jason, Ep. 12.

Menelaus signifies the envy or scorn of the people, he was Helenas husband, Ep. 5.

Minotaure, a monster which by Dedalus Art Pasiphae had by a Bull, while Minos was at the Athenian wars, hence it

The Index.

it was called a Minotauro,
Ep. 10.

N

Nectar, the drink of the Gods, Ep. 15.

Neptune, the god of the Sea,
Ep. 2.

Nereides, Sea Nymphs, Ep. 5.

Nestor lived three ages, Ep. 1.

Nilus, a River of Egypt, Ep. 14.

O

Oebalia, a City, Ep. 9.

Oenoone, a Nymph, Ep. 5.

Orestes son to Agamemnon, and Clytemnestra, Ep. 8.

Orbya, beloved of Boreas,
Ep. 17.

P

Pallas, the goddess of wise-dom, Ep. 4.

Paris, son to Prax, and Heck-ha, Ep. 5. 15.

Pernassus, the Muses mountain,
Ep. 19.

Pasiphae, a lustful wanton woman, Ep. 4.

Patrocles, signifies the honour of his Father, he was son to Menetius, and having put on Achilles Armour, was slain in fight by Hector, E. 3.

Penelope, Ulysses wife, Ep. 1.
Pirithous, a faithful friend to Theseus, Ep. 4.

Pbedra, sister to Ariadne, daughter to Minos, Ep. 4.

Phyllis, from φύλλα leaves, or from Pbylla, signifying in Greek an Almond tree, E. 2.

Phaon, a fair young man, E. 21.

Pyrilla Dencaliuss wife, Ep. 21.

Polyphemus, Ep. 1. Sab, a Gyee

Pygmalion brother to Dido,
Ep. 7.

Proteus, signifies the chief among the people; he landing first on the Trojans ground, was slain by Hector,
Ep. 10.

Pyles, a City in Messenia
where Neleus Nestors Father reigned, Ep. 1.

Pyrhus, the son of Achilles,
Ep. 3. 8.

R

Rhodope, a Mountain of Thrace, Ep. 2.

S

Sappho, a wanton witty woman, Ep. 27.

Scylla, a rocky gulf, Ep. 12.

Seflos,

The Index.

Sellos, a City in Europe, Ep. 17.
Simois, a Trojan River, Ep. 1. 7.
Sparta a City of Greece, E. 15.
Sycheus, Hercules Priest, and Dido's husband, Ep. 7.

TAntalus, who stood in Hell to the chin in water, yet could not drink, Ep. 15.
Telemachus, Mylles son, Ep. 1.
Theseus, son of Aegeus, Ep. 2.
Thetis, Queen of the Sea, E. 19.
Tisiphone, one of the Furies,
Ep. 2.
Tlepolemus, Ep. 1.

Tybris, a River of Italy:
Tyresias, a Prophet, who told
Juno that feminine pleasure exceeded masculine in acts of Venus, Ep. 1. Sab.

VLyfes, a valiant Gracian,
Ep. 17.

ZOne, or girdle, because the brides girdle was untied
by the bridegroom, on her wedding night, Ep. 2.

CARMEN

Carmen inſtar mille

blande landanriugh

In landem Authoris carmen non deſit Amici :

Hoc opus Anchorem landat, hic Author opus;

This Author needs not owe any friend

For Verses in his praise :

The Author doth his work commend,

And his work gives him Bayes.

OVID'S
EPISTLES.

Linn, L.

The Argument of the first Epistle.

When the Greeks went with a great Army to Troy, to revenge the rape of Helen. Pyrrhus the son of Laeetes and Amphissa, took such delight in his young wife Penelope, that he counterfeited him-selfish, which to enjoy her, and absent himself from the wars. But Palamedes discovering his purpose, he was compelled to go with the rest in the Trojan voyage. Where he fought many brave combats, and after the destruction of Troy, which had been ten years besieged, intending to return to his own Country, he took ship with other Grecian Princes, but through Minerva's displeasure, they were scattered and divided by such a violent tempest, that Ulysses wandered ten years more before he returned. So that his wife Penelope, having lived chastly in his absence, and not knowing what hindered his coming home, writes this Epistle unto him, wherein she persuades him by many reasons to return to his own Country.

PENELOPE to ULYSSES.

MY dear Ulysses, thy Penelope
Doth send this Letter to complain of thee,
VVho dost so long from me unkindly stay :
VWrite nothing back, but come thy self away.
For Troy now level with the ground is laid,
VVhich was envy'd by every Grecian maid;
Yet neither Troy, nor Priam's wealth could be
VVorth half so much, as thy good company.
O ! I could wish that Paris had been drown'd,
When his ship was to Lacedemone bound.
Then had not I lain cold in bed alone,
Nor yet complain'd that time runs slowly on ;
Nor yet to pass away the winters night
Had I sat spinning then by candle light,
Fore-casting in what dangers thou mightst be,
And such as were not like to trouble thee,
Thinking on perils more than ever were,
For love is always full of careful fear.
The Trojans now, thought I, do thee assail.
At Hector's name my cheeks with fear grew pale :
And when I heard Achilles was there,
By Hector then my fears recover'd again.

VV
And

And hearing how that Patroclus clad
 In Achilles armour, such ill fortune had,
 That Hector flew him in that false disguise,
 The sad report drew tears out of mine eyes.
 Or when I of Tlepolemus did hear,
 Who with his blood bedew'd Sarpedon's spear,
Tlepolemus death doth then my cares renew,
 And I began straight way to think of you.
 And lastly, if I heard abroad by fame,
 That any of the Grecian side were slain,
 My heart for fear of thee was far more cold
 Than any Ice, when such bad news was told.
 But the just Gods to us more kind do prove,
 And more indulgent to our chaster love.
 For stately Troy is unto ashes burn'd ;
 But my Ulysses lives, though not return'd,
 The Grecian Captains are come home again,
 The Altars do with joyful incense flame ;
 And all the Barbarous spoils which they did take,
 Unto our Country gods they consecrate.
 The love of wives is to their husbands shown
 By gifts, which for their safe returning home,
 Unto the Gods with grateful minds they bring,
 While their husbands songs of Troy's destruction sing.
 Old men, and trembling maids do both desire,
 To hear the tale of Troy, which they admire,
 And wives do hearken with a kind of joy
 To their husbands talking of the siege of Troy.
 And some now do upon their table draw,
 The picture of those fierce wars which they saw :
 And with a little wine before pour'd down,
 Can lively paint the model of Troy town.
 Here Simone floud, here's the sigass land,
 And here did Priam's lofty Palace stand.

Here did Achilles pitch his glittering tents,
And here Ulysses kept his regiments.
Here in this place did valiant Hector fall,
Whose body was drag'd round about the wall
Of Troy, to shew the enemies despite :
Putting the framing Horses in a fright.
For whatsoever in those wars was done,
Old Aeson did relate unto thy son,
Whom I had sent forth to enquire of thee,
And he did bring home all this news to me :
Bringing me tydings how Dolon by name,
And Rhegiss by thy sword at once were slain.
While the one of them in his dead sleep was kill'd,
And the others blood by treachery was spill'd,
And thou amongst thy other bold attempts
By night didst set upon the Thracian Tents,
Slaying so many men ; how couldst thou be
So adventurous if thou hadst remembred me ;
And of thy other victories I did hear,
My heart did burn within my brest for fear,
But what although thy valour did confound
Troy ; and did race the walls unto the ground ?
Shall I, as if Troy were besieg'd, still be
A widow wanting thy sweet company ?
That Troy doth stand I only find alone,
Others rejoice that it is overthrown.
Whose fruitful fields the conquering Grecians now,
Do with the Trojan Oxen daily plough.
For now ripe corn doth grow where Troy once stood,
And all the ground is far with Trojan blood.
The crooked plough doth graze as it goes by
Upon mens bones, which there half buried lie ;
So that they plough up bones as well as land,
And grass doth grow where houses once did stand.

Yet

Yet having wasted Troy, thou keep'st away,
Nor do I know what moveth thee to stay,
Nor can by any means learn in what part
Of all the world (thou most unkindest) art.
If any ship unto our shore doth come,
Then to enquire of thee I straight do run ;
And to the ship-master a Letter give,
To deliver unto thee if thou dost live :
Charging if that it be his chance to see
Ulysses, he should give it unto thee.
I sent to Pylas, where Nestor did reign,
But I from Pylas heard no news again :
I sent unto the Spartans, who could tell
No tidings of thee, or where thou didst dwell,
O would that Troy were standing now again,
For whose destruction I did pray in vain !
If thou wert at the wars, I should know where
Thou wert, and of thy safety stand in fear.
And other women might with me complain,
Because their Husbands came not home again.
To grieved minds this may some comfort be,
To have companions in adversity.
I know not what to fear, yet all things fear ;
My cares and sorrows never greater were.
Thinking what dangers by sea and land may
Enforce thee 'gainst thy will from me to stay.
While thus my fond affection doth excuse thee,
Perhaps thou in requital dost abuse me.
For I do fear thy fancy loves to rove,
And that thou hast some sweet-heart thou dost love
In forrain Countries ; nay, and it may be
That thou dost wooc her by disgracing me,
Telling her that thy Wif's a Country fone,
That knoweth only how to spin at home.

But of my hard belieff I do repent,
 I hope thou art not willingly absent.
 My father Icarus would not have me stay
 A widow still ; but chideth my delay :
 But let him chide, Penelope will be
 A constant wife Ulysses unto thee.
 But though I do by fair entreaty still Prevail so much that I do change his will,
 Or alter it, so that he's not easilie
 To use a Fathers power to force my mind ;
 The Dulichians, and the Samians come to wone me,
 And the Zacynthians often come unto me ;
 And of forreign suiters such a wanton crue
 Do haunt me, that I know not what to do.
 Who in thy Palace do most freely raign,
 Wasting those goods, which thou before didst gain.
Pisanderus, Polybus, and Medon too,
Eurymachus, and Antinous come to wooo
 Me, and in thy absence do, consume and eat
 That estate thou didst gain by blood and sweat:
 Poor Irus and Melanthius that doth feed
 His sheep, are suiters too, and hope to speed,
 And all thy household here doth but consist
 Of three, that are too weak for to resist ;
 Namely Laertes, who is spent and done,
 Thy wife, and young Telemachus thy Son,
 Whom I had almost lost, while that he went,
 To the City Pylos without our consent.
 And when the fates our time of death assign,
 May his hand close up both thy eyes and mine ;
 Our Oxe-herd, Swine-herd, and our old Nurse, are
 All of one mind, and do make the same prayer :
 And how can old Laertes power restrain
 Those wanton Suiters which at home do raign.

Telemachus

Telemachus in time will grow more strong,
His Father now should keep him from all wrong.
I have no strength to drive these Suiters hence,
Then come thou home, and be thy own defence.
Think on thy son to whom thou shouldst impart
Instruction, that may season his young heart.
Think on Laertes, come and close his eyes,
VVho in his old age even bed-rid lyes.
And think on me, for when thou wentst from home,
Full young was I, but now an old wife grown.

B. 4

Tb₂

Consequently, the results of digests of the 112 samples were used to calculate the mean and standard deviation of the mean for each of the 112 samples.

¹⁰ See, for example, the discussion of the 1992 Constitutional Convention in the Journal of African Law 36 (2002).

fixed in 10% formalin.

eternal and shadow world no longer than the life of man.

The Argument of the second Epistle.

Descr. Ensephass, the son of Theseus and Phedra, returning home from the Trojan wars, was driven by a tempest into Thrace, where Phyllis the daughter of Lycaon and Craustus, being then Queen of Thrace, gave him courteous entertainment, both at board and bed; but when he had staid a while with her, as soon as he heard that Theseus was dead, who had expellit his Father Theseus out of the City of Athens, And assumed the government to himself, he being desirous to regain his Kingdom, desired leave of Phyllis to go and send stelle his affairs, promising her within one moneth to return again : and so having made ready his shipp, he saileth to Athens, and tarries there. Whereupon after four moneths were past, Phyllis writes this Epistle, persuading him to be faithful unto her, and to remember her kindness, and his own promise, which if he neglects to do, she threatens to kill her self, and so revenge the violation of her Maiden chastity.

PHYLLOS TO DEMOPHOON.

Phyllis that did so kindly entertain
Thee, O Demophoon, must of thee complain :
Before the Moons sharp horns were once grown round,
Thou didst promise to land on the Thracian ground ;
But now four Moons are chang'd, four moneths are past,
And yet thy ship is not return'd at last :
If thou dost count the time, which we that are
In love do strictly reckon with great care ;
Thou having broke thy promise needs must say,
That my complaint comes not before the day.
My fears were slow, for we do slowly give Credence to those things we would not believe.
Which made me for thy sake even falsely fain,
That the North-wind drove back thy sails again,
Sometimes I fear'd lest that in Hebrus sound
Thy ship might in those shallow waves be drown'd,
Oft I besought the gods for thy return,
And on their Altars did sweet incense burn.
When the wind stood fair, I said unto my self,
Sure he will come now if he be in health.
My faithful love was witty to invent
Something that might still hinder thy intent.
But yet thou stayest, nor can thy promise move
Thee to return, nor yet our former love.
But I perceive, Demophoon, by thy stay,
One wind did drive thy ship and faith away.

Thy

Thy Ship returns not, which makes me complain,
That all thy faithful promises were vain.
VVhat have I done? Alas I rashly lov'd thee!
And yet this fault to pity might have mov'd thee.
I entertain'd thee, this was all my fault,
Yet this offence might have been kindness thought.
VWhere is thy faith, thy hand which thou didst give me,
And oaths thou sworest to make me believe thee?
Swearing by Hymen that thou wouldst not carry,
But come again and thy poor Phyllis marry.
And by the rugged Sea hast often swore,
VWhich thou both hast and wilt sail often o're,
And by Neptune thy great Uncle, who with ease
Can calm the raging of the angry seas:
By Juno who in marriages delights:
And by torch-bearing Ceres mystick rites.
Should all these Gods revenge thy perjuries,
VWhich are high treasons to their Majesties;
And should all punish thee with one consent,
Thou couldst not sure indure their punishment.
To rig and mend thy Ships I care did take,
And in requital thou didst me forsake,
I gave thee opportunity to run
Away, 'tis I that have my self undone.
I did believe thy fair and gentle words,
Of which the falsest heart most store affords,
And because thou didst come of a good descent,
I did believe thou hadst a good intent.
I did believe thy tears: and hadst thou taught
Thy tears to be as false as was thy thought?
O yes, thy tears would flow with cunning Art,
VWhen thou didst bid them to disguise thy heart.
Thy vows and promises I did believe,
And any of those shows might me deceive.

Nor am I griev'd because I entertain'd thee,
Such kindness shew'd to thee could not have sham'd me.
But I repent, because to add more height
Unto thy entertainment, I one night
Did suffer thee to come into my Bed,
Where thou didst rob me of my Maiden-head.
Would I had dy'd before that fatal night
Wherein I yeilded thee so much delight.
For if I had not thus my self betray'd,
Then Phyllis might have liv'd and dy'd a Maid.
But I did hope that thou more constant wert,
" That hope is just which springeth from desert.
For I did know I had deserv'd thy love,
Which made me hope that thou wouldest faithful prove.
It is no glory to deceive a Maid,
Since she deserveth pity that's betray'd
By her kind heart, and hath too soon believ'd,
For thus poor Phyllis was by thee deceiv'd,
And instead of other praises may they say,
That this was he that did a Maid betray'd
When thy statue shall be in the City plac'd
With thy fathers, which is with high titles grac'd,
VWhen they shall read how valiant Ulysses flew
Those cruel thieves, and also did subdue
The Minotaure, and did the Thebans tame,
And Centaures that by him were also slain :
And lastly, when th' Inscription shall relate
How he went to Hell and knockt at Pluto's gate;
This title shall ye on thy statue read,
" This man deceiv'd his love, and from her fled.
In this thy Father thou dost imitate,
That he fair Ariadne did forsake ;
VWhat he alone excused as a sin,
That act thou only do'st admire in him ;

Shewing

Shewing thy self in this to be his son,
 That thou like him, hast a young maid undon;
 But she is happily to Bacchus married,
 And in his Charriot, drawn with Tlgers, carried :
 The Thracians do my marriage bed contemn,
 Because I lov'd a stranger more then them :
 And some perhaps will say in my disgrace,
 Let her go to Athens, that most learned place ;
 Since she so kind hath to a stranger been,
 The warlike Thracians will have a new Queen.
 The end doth prove the action, but yet may
 He want success, that thinketh so, I say :
 That measures actions not from the intent,
 But counts them good, that have a good event.
 For if Demophoon would again return,
 Then they would honour me whom now they scorn.
 "Unfortunate actions do our credit stain,
 I am faulty, because thou do'st not come again.
 Methinks I see, how when thou leftst our Court,
 Thy ship being ready to forsake our Port ;
 Thy loving arms about my neck were spred,
 Making my lips with tedious kisses red.
 I wept, and when thou saw'st those tears of mine,
 Thou also wept'st and mingled'st them with thine.
 And then thou seem'dst, with a treacherous mind
 Sorry, because thou hadst so fair a wind.
 And at the last, when thou must needs depart,
 Then said'st farewell fair Phyllis my Sweet-heart.
 For when one moneth is come unto an end,
 Look for Demophoon thy faithful friend.
 "Why should I look for thy return in vain,
 Who hadst no purpose to return again ;
 Yet I le look for thy coming back how ever,
 For it is better to come late, than never.

But

But I do fear thou hast a new Sweet-heart,
One that doth alienate from me thy heart,
That thou forgotten Phyllis do'st not know :
Wo's me, if Phyllis be forgotten so ;
Who did Demophoon kindly entertain,
When sore'd by storms he to our Harbour came ?
Whose necessities with treasure I supply'd,
And gave him many royal gifts beside.
My Kingdom unto thee I did submit,
Thinking a woman could not govern it ;
Even all those goodly Lands I offered thee,
'Twixt Hæmus and the shady Rhodope.
Besides, thou didst my Virgin Zone untie ;
And violate my chaste Virginity.
And at our marriage the fatal Owle
Did sing, while mad Tisiphone did howle :
Aleæla with her snaky hair was there ;
The Candles did like funeral-lights appear.
Oft sadly to some rock I go, whose height
May make me to see far at sea out-right.
If it be day, or if the Stars do shine,
I look still how the wind stands at that time,
If a far off a ship I chance to see,
I straight do hope that it thy ship may be.
And then in hast upon the sands I run
So far, that I unto the Sea-waves come.
But when I have at length my error found,
Amongst my maids I fall down in a swound ;
There is a hollow Bay bent like a bow,
Whose rocky sides into the sea far go ;
To cast my self from hence is my intent,
Since to deceive me thou art falsely bent.
For when thou seest my body like a wrack
Cast on thy shore, I know thou wilt look back

On the sad sight, and though thy heart could be
More hard than Adamant, thou wilt pity me.
Sometimes I could drink poison, or afford
To stab my tender brest with a sharp sword,
Or put a halter 'bout my neck, which oft
Thou haft embraced with thy arms more soft.
For Ile revenge my loss of Chastity,
Though I am doubtful yet what death to die,
And to declare my death from thee did come,
These lines shall be engrav'd upon my tomb.
Phyllis that did Demophoon entertain,
Was by his unkindnes, and her own hand slain.

The

The Argument of the third Epistle.

The Grecians being arrived at Brygia, began to take the Cities near Troy, especially those opposite to the Isle Leba. Achilles the Son of Peleus and Thetis, invaded both the Cilicians with Thessians, and Lynessa besieged and took the Town Chryossus, and brought away two fair Virgins, Afis, the Daughter of Chryses, called afterward by their Fathers names, Chryses, he bestows on Prince Agamemnon, but keeps Arisis to himself. But Agamemnon being commanded

minded by the Oracle to restore Chryses to her Father, took Brioseis from Achilles : Who taking it as an indignity, absents himself from the wars ; no entreaty can prevail to make him fight against Troy. Agamemnon sends him Brioseis again with gifts, he slighteth them both. Brioseis thereupon in this Epistle complains of his too violent anger, entreats him to fight against the Trojans, to accept Agamemnon's offer, and receive her again.

BRISEIS to ACHILLES.

THIS Letter Brioseis unto thee doth send,
Which I perhaps in Greek have rudely pen'd.
My tears did make those blots which thou doft see,
And yet these weeping blots may speak for me.
If a Captive may with modesty complain
Of thee, my Lord, do not my fute disdain.
Unto Agamemnon thou didft me resign,
And yet alas this was no fault of thine !
When that Euribates and Talthibius came
To fetch me, whom thou durft not then detain.
They wondred that thou couldft so soon deliver
Me to the Kings use, if thou lov'dft me ever.
Thou mightft have seemed loath for to depart,
And have bestow'd one kiss on thy Sweet-heart.
But yet I wept a pace, my hair I tore,
As if I were a Captive made once more.
I often thought to steal away to thee,
But then I fear'd the Trojan enemy :
Lest being surpriz'd by them in my attempt,
They should to Priamus daughters me present.
But thou wilt say thou couldft not me detain ;
But yet thou mightft have fetcht me back again.
Patroclus then did speak thus in my ear ;
Why doft thou weep? thou shalt not stay long there.
Nay, thou wilt not receive me now again,
And much less fetch her whom thou doft disdain.

Ajax

Ajax and Pheaux both did come to thee,
Thy friend and cozen by consanguinity.
And Ulysses, who with gifts and prayers did woot thee,
To receive thy Briséus when they brought me to thee.
And for a present twenty basons brought,
With seven three-footed tables carv'd and wrought :
To these ten Talents of gold added were,
And twelve brave Steeds that were train'd up to war,
And many Captive maids, who with one look
Could take the Conquerers that had them took :
And a fair Virgin that thy wife might be ;
But sure thou needst no other wife but me.
From Agamemnon wouldest thou me redeem,
That to receive these gifts so nice dost seem ?
Achilles, how have I mov'd thy neglect ?
Why dost thou now unkindly me reject ?
" Or is its fortunes custome still to frown
" On those, who by misfortune are cast down ?
I saw thee when thou didst Lynneßus take,
And of thy Briséus didst a captive make.
I saw how many of my kindred were
Slain by thy valiant hand, and did lye there
Panting for life, till their fresh wounds had bled
So much, that all the earth was painted red.
Yet when I lost those friends, I got another ;
Thou art my Lord, my Husband, and my Brother.
And by thy Mother Queen of the salt Flood
Thou sworest all should turn unto my good,
Binding thy self with promises, that I
Should be most happy in captivity.
But now both me, and those gifts which are sent thee,
Thou dost refuse, for neither can content thee.
And I hear to morrow by the break of day,
Thou meanest to take ship and sail away.

When I did hear the news, my heart did fail,
And presently my bloodless cheeks grew pale,
But wilt thou go from me my Dear, & leave me?
Unto whose custody wilt thou bequeath me?
May I be laid into the earths cold bed;
Or may the flaming thunder strike me dead;
Ere I behold the ship, cutting her way
Through the green waves while I am left to stay;
If thou intendest to return again,
Take me along, who no great burthen am;
I'll follow thee and serve thee all my life
As a poor Captive, not as thy dear wife.
I can inure my hands to labour hard;
And I can be content to spin or card.
One of the fairest Maids that Greece ere bred
Shall be thy wife, and warm thy nuptial-bed;
My humble thoughts do not so high aspire,
To be thy servant is all I desire.
I'll sit and spin untill my task be done;
And untill all my Flax to thred be spun.
Yet suffer not thy wife, I pray, to chide me,
Because I love thee, she will not abide me.
And do not suffer her to tear my hair;
Think how of Eris thou didst once take care;
Nay though thou suffer her my hair to tear,
Do not despise me, this is all my fear.
What wouldest thou have? Agamemnon doth repent;
And Greece for wronging thee is penitent.
Subdue thy self, and now let him that hath
Conquer'd so many, conquer his own wrath:
Why dost thou let the coward Hector wast
And spoyl the Grecians? take thou arms at last.
Achilles take thy arms, but first me take:
Then crush those fellows, and force them to quake.

For my sake thou wert angry and offended,
 For me thy wrath began, in me let it be ended,
 It's no disgrace unto my suit to yeild,
Oetises did go unto the field
 Perswaded by his wife, though he laid by
 His arms, and to aid his Country did deny,
 She did perswade her valiant husband straight;
 But my words have, alas ! no power, nor waight,
 I dare not call my self thy wife, for I
 Have lived with thee in Captivity;
 Though my Lord hath often call'd his handmaid
 Unto his bed, and I have him obey'd,
 I do remember that a captive Maid
 Did call me Mistress unto whom I said,
 Lay not the waight of scorn on misery,
 That title suits not with Captivity.
 For by my fathers ashes I do swear,
 Of whom a reverend memory I bear ;
 By my three brothers souls, whose blood was spill'd
 For their Country, and in its defence were kill'd :
 By my lips, and by those soft lips of thine
 Which we did often times together joyn ;
 And by thy sword I swear, since I went from thee,
 That Agamemnon never lay with me.
 But for thy honesty thou dar'st not swear,
 If I should put thee to thy oath, I fear.
 The Grecians think with sorrow thou art pin'd,
 But thou hast musick to refresh thy mind ;
 While thy Sweet-heart doth clasp thee in her arms,
 Making her moistned kisses powerful charms
 To stay thee there, which makes thee loath to fight ;
 Love and sweet musick, yeild thee more delight.
 It is the safer course in bed being laid,
 To sport thy self with some young fearful Maid ;

Or when with those joyes thou art tyr'd too much,
 To give thy Thracian Lyre a gentle touch ;
 Then to hold Buckler or sharp-pointed Spear,
 Or on thy head a waigthy Helmer wear ;
 Yee in brave actions thou didst once delight,
 And to win glory only thou wouldest fight.
 Didst thou love war till I was captive made ?
 And is thy Valour since that time decay'd ?
 The gods forbid, I hope to see thy Spear
 Wound valiant Hector, who doth no man fear.
 Let the Grecians send me to my Lord to plead
 Their cause with kisles, I can intercede
 More powerfully than Phœnix or Ulysses,
 There is a sweeter eloquence in kisles.
 If I incircle thee within mine arms,
 My close embraces are like powerful charms ;
 My naked breasts being in thy view laid open,
 Will soon perswade thee, though no word be spoken.
 If thou wert like the sea, void of compassion,
 My silent tears would move commiseration.
 As thou desirest thy fathers length of dayes,
 Or to see Pyrrhus crown'd with wreaths of Bayes.
Achilles take thy Briseis once again ;
 Have pity on that grief which I sustain.
 If thy love be turn'd to hate, yet do not flout me,
 Kill me out-right, who cannot live without thee.
 Nay, thou doft kill me, for my strength doth fade,
 My beauty and fresh colour is decay'd.
 Yet I do hope thou wilt thy Briseis take,
 And this hope makes me live, even for thy sake.
 But if my hopes of thee do fail, then I
 To meet my brother and husband will dye.
 Yet when others shall perchance read my sad story,
 To kill a woman will yeild thee no glory.

Yet

Yes let no other kill me, thy weapon can
Kill me as soon as any other man.
Let thy sword give me such a wound, that I
May bleed with pleasure, and so bleeding die.
Let thy sword send me to Elysian rest,
Which might have wounded Hector's valiant brest.
But let me live if thou art pleased so,
Thy love doth ask what thou grant'st to thy foe,
And rather kill thy Trojan foes than I
Express thy valour on thy enemy.
And whether thou intend'st to go or stay,
Command me as my Lord to come away.

The Argument of the fourth Epistle.

THESEUS the son of Ægeus having slain the Minotaure, brought away by ship Ariadne daughter to Minos, and Pasiphae, to whom for helping him in killing the Minotaure, he had promised marriage, and her sister Phædra. But admonished by Bacchus, he leaves Ariadne in the Isle Naxos or Chios, and marries Phædra, who in Theseus absence falls in love with her son in Law Hippolytus, Theseus son by Hippolita an Amazons. He being a Bachelor, and much addicted to hunting hunting, she having no opportunity to speak to him, discovers her love by this Epistle; whereto cunningly wooing and persuading him to love her, and lest it might seem dishonesty in a mother to solicit her son in law, she begins with an Insinuation,

PHÆDRA to HIPPOLYTUS.

Phedra unto Hippolytus sends health,
Which unless thou giv'st me, I must want my self:
Yet read it, for a Letter cannot fright thee,
There may be something in it may delight thee,
For these dumb Messengers sent out of hand,
Do carry secrets both by sea and land.
The foe will read a letter, though it be Sent to him from his utter enemy.
Thrice I began my mind to thee to break,
Thrice I grew dumb, so that I could not speak,
There is a kind of modesty in love,
Which hindereth those that honest suits do move.
And love hath given command that every lover
Should write that which he blusheth to discover.
Then to contemn loves power it is not safe,
Who over all the gods dominion hath.
'Tis dangerous to resist the power of love,
Who ruleth over all the gods above.
Love bid me write, I followed his direction,
Who told me that my lines should win affection.
O ! since I love thee, may my love again
Raise in thy brest another mutual flame.
That love which hath been a long time delay'd,
At last grows violent, and must be obey'd:
I feel a fire, a fire within my heart,
And the blind wound of love doth rage and smart.
As tender Heyfers cannot brook the yoke,
Nor the wild Colt, that is not backt nor broak,

Endure the bridle, so loves yoak I find
 Is heavy to an unexperienc'd mind.
 When 'tis their art, and they can easily do it;
 That from their youth have been train'd up unto it;
 She that hath let her time run out at waft,
 Her love is violence when she loves at last,
 The forbidden fruits of love I keep for thee,
 In tasting them let us both guilty be..
 It is some happiness to pluck and cull
 Fruit from a tree, Whose boughs with fruit are full ;
 Or from the bush to gather the first Rose ;
 I am the tree and bush where loves fruit grows :
 Yet hitherto my fame was never blotted ;
 But for white chastity I have been noted ;
 And I am glad that I my love have plac'd
 On one by whom I cannot be disgrac'd.
 Adultery in her is a base faſt,
 That with some base fellow doth commit the act.
 But should Juno grant me her Jupiter,
 In love I would Hippolytus prefer.
 And since I lov'd thee, I do now embrace
 Those sports which thou doſt love; to hunt and chase
 Wilde Savage beasts, for I would gladly be
 A Huntress to enjoy thy company.
 And now like thee, no Goddes I do know,
 But chaste Diana with her bended bow.
 I love the woods, and take delight to ſet
 The toyles, and chase the Deer into the net.
 And I do take delight to hoop and hollow,
 And cheer the dogs, while they the chase do follow.
 To caſt a dart I now am cunning grown.
 Sometimes upon the grass I ly along,
 Sometimes for pleasure I a Chariot drive,
 Reuyning the horſe that with the bridle ſtrive.

Some-

Sometime like those mad Bacchis I do run,
 Who pipe when they to the Idian hill do come;
 Or like those that have seen the horned fawns,
 And Dryads lightly tripping o're the lawns.
 In such a frantick fit they say I am,
 When love torments me with his raging flame;
 And this same love of mine perhaps may be
 By fate entail'd upon one family,
 For it is given to us in love to fall;
 And Venus takes a tribute of us all.
 For first, great Jupiter did rarely gull
Europa with the false shape of a Bull.
 My mother Pasiphae in a Cow of wood
 The leaping of a lustful Bull withstood.
 My sister likewise to false Theseus gave
 A Clew of silk, and so his life did save,
 Who through the winding labyrinth was led
 By the direction of this slender thred.
 And now like Mino's stock, even I
 Love as the rest did, in extremity.
 It fortunes that our love thus cross should be,
 Thy father lov'd my sister, I love thee.
 Thus Theseus and Hippolytus his son
 Do glory that their love hath overcome
 Two sisters, but I would we had remain'd
 At home, when we came to thy fathers land.
 For then especially thy presence mov'd me,
 And from that time I ever since have lov'd thee.
 My eye convey'd unto my heart delight,
 To like of thee, for thou wert cloth'd in white,
 A flowry garland did thy soft hair crown,
 And thy complexion was a lovely brown.
 Which some for a stern visage had mistook;
 But Phaedra thought thou hadst a manly look.

For

For young-men should not be like women drest,
 A careless dressing, doth become them best ;
 Thy sternness, and loose flowing of thy hair,
 And dusty countenance most graceful were.
 While thy curveting Steed did bound and fling,
 I admir'd to see thee ride him in the ring ;
 If with thy strong arm thou didst toss the pike,
 Thy nimble strength I did approve and like.
 Or, if thou took'st thy Javelin in thy hand ,
 Me thought thou didst in comely posture stand,
 For all thy actions yeilded me delight,
 And did appear most graceful in my sight.
 Of the woods wildness do not then partake,
 Nor suffer me to perish for thy sake.
 For why shouldst thou in hunting spend thy leisure ?
 And no delight on Venus sweeter pleasure ?
 There's nothing can endure without due rest,
 By which our wearied bodies are refresht.
 And thou might'st imitate thy Diana's bow,
 Which if too often bended, weak will grow.
Cephalus was a Woodman, man of great fame,
 And many wild beasts by his hand were slain,
 Yet with Aurora he did fall in love,
 Her blushing beauty did his fancy move :
 While from her aged husbands bed the rose,
 And wisely to young Cephalus straight goes.
Venus and young Adonis oft would lie
 Together on the grass most wantonly.
 And underneath some tree in the hot weather ,
 They would lie kissing in the shade together.
Atalanta did Oenides fancy move,
 And gave her wilde beasts skins to shew his love,
 And therefore why may'st thou not fancy me,
 Sith without love the woods unpleasant be,

For I will follow thee o're the rocky cliff,
And never fear the boars sharp fanged teeth;
Two seas the narrow Illymus do oppose,
The raging waves on both sides of it flows.
Together thee and I will goe in here
The Kingdom, than my Country far more dear :
My husband Theseus hath long absent been,
He's with his friend Peribous it doth seem.
Theseus (unless we will the truth deny)
Doth love Peribous more then thee or I.
'Tis his unkindness that he stayes so long,
But he hath done us both far greater wrong.
With his great Club he did my brother slay,
And left my sister to wild beasts a prey.
Thy mother was a warlike Amazon,
Deserving favour for thy sake her son :
Yet cruel Theseus kill'd her with his sword,
Who did to him so brave a son afford ;
Nor would he marry her ; for he did aim
That as a bastard thou shouldest never raign ;
And many children he on me begot,
Whose untimely death not I but he did plot ;
Would I had died in labour, ere that I
Had wrong'd thee by a second Progeny.
Why shouldest thou reverence thy fathers bed,
Which he doth shun, and now away is fled ?
If a mother be to love her son enclin'd,
Why should vain names fright thy courageous mind ?
Such strict precisenels former times became,
When good old Saemyr on the earth did raign.
But Saemyr's dead, his laws are cancell'd now ;
Jove rules, then follow what Jove doth allow ;
For Jove all sort of pleasure doth permit,
Sister may marry if they think it fit ,

With

With their own brothers, Venus bonds doth tye
 The knot more close of consanguinity.
 Besides, who can our stoln joyes discover ?
 With a fair outside we our fault may colour :
 If our embraces were discern'd by some,
 They would say that mother surely loves her son .
 Thou need'st not come by night, no doors are bar'd
 And shut on me, thy passage is not hard.
 One house as it did once, may us contain,
 Thou oft hast kist me, and shalt kis again,
 Thou shalt be safe with me, nay, wert thou seen
 Within my bed, such faults have smother'd been.
 Then come with speed to ease my troubled mind,
 And may love alwayes prove to thee more kind,
 Thus I most humbly do entreat and sue,
 Pride and great words become not those that woe.
 Thus I most humbly beg of thee alone,
 Alas ! my pride and my great words are gone :
 To my desires long time I would not yeild ;
 But yet at last affection won the field.
 And as a Captive at thy royal feet
 Thy mother begs ; Love knows not what is meet.
 Shame hath forsook his Colours in my cheek
 It is confess, yet grant that love I seek.
 Though Minos be my father, who keeps under
 His power the seas, and that darteth thunder
 Be my Grand-father ; and he be a kin
 To me, that hath his forehead circled in
 With many a clear beam, a sharp pointed ray,
 And drives the purple Chariot of the day,
 Love makes a servant of Nobility.
 Then for my Ancestors even pity me.
 Nay Creet, Joves Island, shall my Dowry be,
 And all my Court (Hippolytus) shall serve thee.

My mother softned a Buls stern breast,
And wilt thou be more cruel then a beast ?
For love-sake love me , who have thus complain'd,
So may'st thou love and never be disdain'd:
So may the Queen of Forests help thee still,
So may the Woods yeild game for thee to kill.
May Fawns and Satyres help thee every where,
So may'st thou wound the Boar with thy sharp spear.
So may the Nymphs give thee water to slake
Thy burning thirst, though thou do Maidens hate.
Tears with my prayers I mingle, read my prayers,
And imagine that you do behold my tears.

The

My

The Argument of the first Epistle.

Hecuba Daughter to Cissus, and wife to Priam being with child, dreamt that she was delivered of a flaming Fire-brand, that set all Troy on fire. Priam troubled in mind, consults with the Oracle, receives answer, that his son should be the destruction of his Country, and therefore as soon as he was born, commands his death. But his Mother Hecuba sends her son Paris secretly to the Kings Shepherds. They keep him, till being grown a Young-man, he fancied the the Nymph Oenone, and marryed her. But when Juno, Pallas, and Venus contended about the golden Apple, which had this inscription, D E T U R P U L C H R I O R I, Let it be given to the fairest, Jupiter made Paris their Judge. To whom Juno promised a Kingdom, Pallas Wisdom, Venus Pleasure, and the fairest of Women; but he gave sentence for Venus. Afterward being known by his Father, and received into favour, he failed to Sparta, whence he took Helen wife to Menelaus, and brought her to Troy. Oenone hearing thereof, complains in this Epistle of his unfaithfulness; persuading him to send back Helen to Greece, and receive her again.

OENONE to PARIS.

UNTO my Paris, for though thou art not mine,
Thou art my Paris, because I am thine,
A Nymph doth send from the Idean Hill
These following words, whieh do this paper fill.
Read it, if that thy new wife will permit,
My letter is not in a strange hand writ.
Oenone through the Pbrygian woods well known,
Complains of wrong, that thou to her hast done,
What god hath us'd his power to cros our love?
What fault of mine hath made thee faithless prove?
With deserv'd sufferings I could be content;
But not with undeserved punishment.
What I deserve, most patient I could bear,
But undeserv'd punishments heavy are.
Thou wert not then of such great dignity,
When a young Nymph did first marry thee;
Though now forsooth, thou Priam's son art prov'd,
Thou wert a servant first, when first we lov'd:
And while our sheep did graze, we both have laid
Under some tree together in the shade;
Whose boughs like a green Canopie were spred,
While the soft grass did yeild us a green bed:
And when the dew did fall, we often lay
In a poor Cottage, upon straw or hay.

I shew'd thee both, what Lawns and Forrests were Likely to yeild much store of game, and where
 The wilde beasts did in secret caves abide,
 And their young ones in the hollow Rocks did hide.
 To set thy Toyles with thee I oft have gone,
 After the Hounds I o're the hills have run.
 My name on every Beech-tree I do finde.
 Thou hadst engrav'd Oenone on their rinde,
 And as the body of the tree doth, so
 The letters of my name do greater grow.
 Close by a River (I remember it)
 These lines are on an Alder fairly writ ;
 And may the Alder flourish still and spread,
 Because these lines may on the bark be read ;
 When Paris doth to Oenone false become,
 Xanthus unto his spring doth backward run,
 Xanthus ran back, thy course now backward take,
 For Paris doth his Oenone forsake.
 That day did unto me most fatal prove ;
 That day began the winter of thy love,
 When Venus, Juno, and fair Pallas came
 Naked before thee, and did not disdain
 To chuse thee for their Judge, when thou had'st told
 The story to me, my faint heart grew cold,
 Of the experienc'd I did counsel take,
 They did resolve me, thou wouldst me forsake.
 For thou didst build new ships without delay,
 And didst send forth a Fleet to sea straightway.
 Yet thou didst weep at thy departure hence ;
 Do not deny it, it was no offence ;
 For by my love thy credit is not stain'd,
 But of loving Helen thou mayst be ashame'd,
 Thou wept'st, and also at that very time
 Thou saw'st me weep, my tears dropping wiſh thine.

And

And as the Vine about the Elme doth wiade,
 So thy arms were about my neck entwinde.
 When thou complainid'st because the winds croſs were,
 The Sailers laught, because the wind stood fair.
 Thou didſt kiſſe me oft, when thou didſt depart,
 And thou werſt loth to ſay, Farewel, Sweet-heart.
 At laſt, a gentle gale of wind did blow,
 So that thy ſhip from land did slowly go.
 I looking after thee, long time did stand
 Weeping, and ſhedding tears on the dry ſand.
 And to the green Xeretides I did pray,
 Thy voyage might be ſpeedy without ſtay :
 For me it was too ſpeedy, ſince that I
 Sustain the loſs of thy false love thereby.
 To Theſſaly my Prayers have brought the eſafe,
 And for a Whore my prayer prevailed hath.
 There is a Mountain that to ſea doth look,
 Which beating of the foaming waves can brook :
 From hence when I beheld thy ſhip was coming,
 Into the ſea I preſently was ranning ;
 But ſtanding ſtill, at length I might diſcern
 A purple flag, which waved on the ſtern ;
 Then whether it were thy ſhip I did doubt,
 Because ſuch colours thou didſt not put out.
 But when thy ſhip to ſhoar did neerer stand,
 And a fair gale did bring it close to land,
 A womans face I ſtraightway did behold,
 Which made my heart to tremble, and wax cold.
 And while I stood doating there, I might eſpie
 Thy ſweet heart, that did on thy bosome lie.
 O then I wept, my breast I strook, and beat
 And tore my cheekes, that with my tears were wet ;
 Filling the Mountain Ida with my cries ;
 And there I did bewail my miseries.

May Helena at last so weep, so grieve,
 When thou dost falsly her forfake and leave :
 And may she that this wrong to me doth offer,
 Be wrong'd in the like kind, and like wrong suffer.
 When thou wert poor, and led'st a Shepheards life,
 None but Oenone was thy loving wife.
 Tis not thy wealth, nor state that I admire ;
 Nor to be Priams daughter do I desire.
 Yet Priam, nor his Hecuba, need disdain
 Me for their daughter since I worthy am.
 I am fit to be a Princess, to command,
 A royal Scepter would become my hand,
 Despise me not, because that I with thee
 Have lain under some shady Beechen-tree.
 For I am fitter for thy Royal bed,
 When it with purple Quilts is covered.
 Lastly, my love is safest, since for me
 No wars shall follow, nor no Fleet shall be Sent forth ; but if thou Helena do take,
 She shall by force of arms be feached back.
 Blood is the portion which thou shalt obtain,
 If thou dost marry with this stately Dame.
 Ask Hector and Deiphobus, if she Should not unto the Greeks restored be ;
 Ask Priam, and Axenor wise and grave,
 Who by their age much deep experience have,
 For to performe a beauteous rape before
 Thy Country, must be bad and base all o're ;
 Since to defend a bad cause is a shame,
 Her Husband shall just wars 'gainst thee maintain.
 Nor think that Helena faithful will become,
 Who was so quickly woo'd, so quickly won.
 As Menelaus grieves, because that she
 Hath with a stranger, by adultery

Wrang'd the chaste rites of the Nuptial bed,
 And let a stranger so adhorn his head :
 So thou wilt then confess, no art, or cost,
 Can purchase honesty, that once is lost.
 She that is bad once, will in bad persever,
 And being bad once will be bad for ever.
 As she loves thee, so she before did love
Meslam, unto whom she false did prove.
 Thou mightst have been more faithful unto me,
 As thy brother was to fair Andromache.
 But thou art lighter than dry leaves, which be
 By every wanton wind blown off the tree :
 Or like the waving corn, which every whiff
 Of wind doth bend, untill it grow more stiff.
 Thy Cousen once (for I remember't well)
 With dishevell'd hair did thus my fate foretell ;
 What dost thou Genone ? why do'st thou sow
 The barren sands ? Or why do'st thou thus go
 About to plough the shoor ? it is in vain ;
 Such fruitless tillage can yeild thee no gain.
 A Grezian Maid is coming that shall be Fatal unto thy Country, and to thee.
 And may the ship be drown'd in the salt flood,
 Whose sad arrival shall cost so much blood.
 When she had said thus, straight my flaxen hair
 Began to heave, and stand upright for fear.
 Alas, thou werst too true a Prophetess,
 For she is come, and deth my place possesst !
 Yet she is but a fair adulteress,
 Who with a strangers love was so soon took ;
 And for his sake her Country hath forsook.
 Besides, one Thesess (though I know not whom)
 Brought her out of the Country long agone.
 And canst thou think an amorous young-man
 Would send her a pure Virgin back agam ?

If thou wouldst know how I these truths discry,
It is my love, love doth in all things pry.

If thou call'st her fault a rapè, yet that name
May seem to hide her fault, but not her shame.

Since she so often from her Country went,

Twas not by violence, but by her consent,

Though by deceit thou me instructed hast,

Yet Oenone still remaineth chaste.

I hid me in the woods, while the wanton rout
Of nimble Satyres sought to find me out:

And horned Fawnes with wreaths of Sharp Pine crown'd
Over the Mountain Ida sought me round.

For great Apollo that protecteth Troy,

The spoyles of my virginity did enjoy,

By force against my will; for which disgrace

I tore my guiltless hair, and scratcht my face;

Yet neither precious stones could me entice,

Not gold; for I set on my self no price.

She that hath wit, and ingenuity,

Seemeth for gifts to sell virginity,

Apollo thought me worthy to impart

To me the skill of Physick, and his Art:

The vertue of all Herbs he did reveale

To me, and shew'd what Herbs have power to heal.

Yet wo's me, that no powerful Herb is found,

That can recure loves inward bleeding wound.

Since great Apollo who did first invent

The art of Physick, yet for my sake went

And kept Admetus Oxen; for the flame

Of my love turn'd him to a Shepherd Sain:

Though Apollo's art, nor Herbs, cannot relieve me;

Yet thou can'st help me and some comfort give me;

Thou can'st, O then have pity on a Maid:

For me the Grecians shall not thee invade.

As from my blooming years, and childish time
I have been, so let me still remain thine.

Oenone.

The Argument of the Sixth Epistle.

THE Oracle had told Palas the son of Neoptolemus, that he should be near his death, whenever he was sacrificing to his Father, one should come to him with one foot naked, and bare. As he was performing his his yearly sacrifice, Jason son to Aeës, and his Nephew having lost one of his shooes sticking in the mud of the River Anaurus, hastening to the sacrifice, meets with him on foot naked. Pelias remembering the Oracle, persuades Jason to go to Colchos to fetch the golden Fleece, hoping his destruction by the impossibility of the attempt. But courageous Jason willingly undertook the Voyage, and so accompanied with many Grecian Nobles, he set forth in the Ship Argo from Paea, ~~for~~ a Haven of Thessaly, and sailed to the Isle Lemnos ; where when the Women consented to kill all the Men on one night, Hypsiphile who had only preserved her father Theseus alive, then resigned, and at board and bed kindly entertained Jason. But after two years, the time and importunity of his company urging him to proceed in his intended attempt he leaves Hypsiphile with childe, and sails to Colchos ; where by Medea's art having charmed the Dragon fast asleep, and overcome the fierce Buls, he brought away the golden Fleece and Medea. Hypsiphile being grieved that Medea was preferred before her in this Epistle congratulates Jason's return, rails on Medea's cruelty and witchcraft, to make her contemptible ; and lastly, curses both Jason and Medea.

HYPsiphile to JASON.

TO Thessaly thou art return'd again,
Rich in the golden Fleece, which thou didst gain.
I am glad thou'rt well, yet it were better
If I had heard of thy health by thy Letter.
It may be that the wind did not stand fair,
That to my Kingdom thou couldst not repair ;
And yet although contrary winds stood cross,
To venture a letter had been no los.

Hypsiphile had deserv'd thy salutations,
Sent in a Letter of kind commendations.
I heard not by thy letters, but by fame,
That thou didst Mars his sacred Oxen tame ;
And how the Dragons teeth being sow'd, did bring Forth armed men, which from the earth did spring,
In whose blood thou didst not thy hand imbrew,
For those sons of earth one another slew.

And

And from the watchful Dragon, while he slept,
 Thou took'st the golden Fleece which he had kept.
 VVhat sudden joy had I conceiv'd at it,
 If thou this joyful news to me hadst writ !
 Of thy unkindnes why do I complain ?
 I fear thou dost my former love disdain.
 A barbarous Enchauntress thou hast brought,
 And her more worthy of thy love hast thought ;
 Love soon believes; yet I wish, I may be
 Censur'd for rashnes in accusing thee.
 From Thessaly a stranger came of late ;
 And as soon as he was come to my gate,
 I askt him how my Iason did, and staid
 Looking down to the ground, no answer made.
 Straightway into a passion I did break,
 Tearing my garments, and thus I did speak ;
 Tell me if that my Iason live, that I,
 If he be dead, may follow him and die.
 He lives, sayes he : and yet through loving fear
 I scarce believ'd him, though that he did swear.
 But when my doubtful mind his words believ'd,
 I askt what valiant deeds thou hadst atchiev'd ?
 And he related the whole story how
 Thou mad'st the brazen-footed Oxen plough,
 How from the Dragons teeth on the earth sow'd,
 A harvest of brave armed souldiers grow'd ;
 VVhich earth-sprung men did straightway fall at jars,
 And slew each other in their civil wars :
 And that thou kild'st the Dragon : when I heasd
 These deeds of thine, again I grew affeard ;
 Again I asked him, if Iason did live,
 His word through fear, I hardly could believe ;
 Yet by the carriage of his speech I found,
 That thy unkindnes had given me a wound.

VVhere are thy promises ? those marriage bands,
 VVhich once did joyn our loving hearts and hands?
 Or where is Hymens torch that burnt so bright ?
 Fitter to have been a sad funeral light.
 I was no whore; Juno and Hymen too
 At our glad Nuptials themselves did shew.
 Not Juno, nor Hymen, when we did marry,
 But Erinys did the fatal torches carry.
 The Theffalias and Minyans strangers were
 To me; and why did Typhis put in here
 His Ship ? Here is no wealthy Ram doth bear
 A golden fleece upon his back, nor here
 Doth old Elo's fair lofty Palace stand.
 This Lemnia is a little small Island ;
 I had resolv'd (but fate did it withstand)
 To drive thee from hence with a Feminine band.
 Though Lemnian women had their husbands kill'd,
 I thought twas pity thy blood should be spill'd.
 Thy first sight in me such a liking bred,
 Then I entertained thee at boord and bed.
 And thou two Summers with me stay'd'st here,
 And while two winters also passed were.
 And the third year, when thou didst sail away,
 VVith weeping tears unto me thou didst say,
Hypsiphile, though I am forc'd to go
 And leave thee here, yet I would have thee know,
 That till I do return again, I'll be
 Alwayes a faithful Husband unto thee.
 And may that prosper which is in thy womb,
 To make me a glad Parent when I come ;
 Then down thy face thy cunning tears did fall,
 The rest for grief thou couldst not speak at all.
 Of all thy company thou went'st last of all
 Aboord the ship which thou didst Argo call :

Away

Away it flies, when once the hollow sail
 Was driven forward with a lusty gale ;
 And while thy ship the blew waves pass'd o're,
 I lookt unto the sea, thou to the shore.
 And then unto my Turret I did go,
 While tears did down my cheeks and bosome flow :
 I looked through my tears and they did seem,
 As if they watry perspectives had been :
 For thorow them me thought that I could view
 Things farther off than I was wont to do.
 Then I made vows, and I did chafly pray,
 For thy return which vows I now should pay.
 But shall I pay vows for Medea's good ?
 Love mixt with anger doth enrage my blood.
 Because I have lost Jas's that doth live,
 Shall I Sacrifices on th' Altar give ?
 I must confess I alwayes was afraid
 Lest thou shouldst marry some young Grecian Maid.
 I fear'd the Grecian Maids ; but thou hast brought
 A barbarous Harlot of whom I ne're thought :
 She cannot please thee with her beauteous look,
 With her charms and skill in herbs thou art took.
 For from the Sphear she can call down the Moon,
 And hide in clouds the Horses of the Sun ;
 She can make Rivers stav their hasty course,
 And make green woods and stones remove by force.
 Unto the graves with loosen'd hair she comes,
 And out of the warm ashes gathers bones.
 When she would bewitch another, she doth frame
 In wax his piture, and t' increase his pain
 In the heart of it small needles doth stick,
 Which maketh his own heart to ake and prick.
 And by her cursed charms she can force love,
 Which beauty and fair vertue ought to move.

How

How canst thou then embrace her with delight ?
 Or sleep securely by her in the night ?
 But as she did with charms the Dragon quell,
 And Bulls, so she hath charm'd thee with a Spell ;
 Besides of glory she will have a share,
 Out of thole deeds by thee performed were.
 And some of Pelias side will think each deed
 Of thine, did from the force of charms proceed ;
 And that though Jason failed unto Greece,
Medea brought away the golden Fleece.
 Thy father and thy mother both are wroth,
 That thou shouldst bring a wife out of the North,
 A husband for her may at home be found,
 Or else where Tanais doth Scythia bound.
 But Jason is more fickle than the wind,
 And in his words no constancy I find.
 As thou went'st forth, why didst not come again ?
 Coming and going I thy wife remain.
 If Nobility of birth can thee content,
King Thoas is my father by descent ;
Bacchus my Uncle is, whose wifes crown shines
 With stars enlightning all the lesser signes.
 And faithful Lemnos shall my Dowry be,
 Which thou might'st have, if that thou wouldest have me.
Jason for my delivery may be glad
 Of that sweet burthen which by him I had ;]
 For Lucina unto me so kind hath been,
 That I two children unto thee did bring.
 They are most like to thee in outward shew,
 Yet they their fathers falsehood do not know :
 These young Embassadors I to thee had sent,
 But their step-mother hindered my intent ;
 I feared fierce Medea, whose hands be Ready to act all kind of villany.

She that her brothers limbs could piece-meal tear,
 Would she have pity on my children dear ?
 And yet her charms have madly blinded thee,
 To prefer her before Hypsiphile.
 She was an adulteress when first she knew thee ;
 I by chaste marriage was given to thee.
 She betray'd her father, I sav'd mine from death ;
 She forsook Colches, but me Lemnos hath.
 And though her dowry be her wickedness,
 From me she got my Husband nevertheless.
Jason, I blame the Lemnian womens act,
 Yet wronged sorrow thrust us on each fact.
 Tell me, suppose cross winds by chance had driven
 Thee, and thy company into my Haven ;
 If with my children I had come to meet thee,
 With curses might not I most justly greet thee ?
 How couldst thou look upon my babes or me ?
 What death deserv'st thou for thy treachery ?
 To preserve thee it had my mercy been,
 And sure I had, though thou unworthy seem.
 And with the harlots blood I would not fail,
 To fill my cheeks, which her charms have made pale.
Medea to Medea I would be,
 And furiously revenge my injury.
 If great Jupiter will my prayer receive,
 Like to Hypsiphile, so may she grieve.
 And since she like a Succubus me wrongs,
 May she know what unto my grief belongs.
 And as I am of my husband bereft,
 May she be a widow with two children left ;
 As to her brother, and her father she
 Was crueill, may she to her husband be.
 And may she wander, o're earth, sea, and ayre
 A hatred mardress, hopeless, poor, and bare.

Having

Having lost my Husband thus I pray beside,
May he live accursed with his wicked Bride.

The Argument of the seventh Epistle.

After the destruction of Troy, Aeneas the son of Anchises and Venus, taking his Teneses or household gods with him, goes to sea with twenty ships. Through tempestuous weather at sea, he is driven to Lybia where Didon (as Virgil hath fained) Daughter to Bellarus, and wife wife to Siebas Hercules Priest, leaving Tyrs, for the cruel avarice of her brother Pigmalion, who had unawares kill'd her husband for his wealth, and built the new City Carthage: she most magnificently entertained Aeneas and his companions, loved him, and enjoyed him; when Merozy admonish'd him to depart for Italy, which country the Oracle had promised him: Dido, having in vain endeavoured by entreaty to divert him from his purpose, and stay his journey, being sick to death, writes unto him, accusing him as the cause of her death.

DIDO to AENEAS.

AS the Swan by Mzeanders fords doth lie
In the moist weeds, and sings before she die:
So I not hoping to perswade thy stay,
Since one that will not hear me I do pray.
Having lost my credit and virginity,
To lose a few words a small los will be;
For thy poor Dido thou mean'st to forsake,
And unto sea wilt a new voyage make.
Aeneas, thou wilt needs depart from me,
To finde strange Kingdoms out in Italy.
Thou car'st not for new Carthage, or my Land,
Whose Scepter I have given into thy hand.
Thou shun'st my Country which might be thy own,
And seek'st a Country unto thee unknown,
Which if thou finde'st out, thou canst not gain:
For who will suffer a stranger to raign?
Thou seekest another Dido whom in love
Thou may'st deceive and false unto her prove;
Or when like unto Carthage canst thou build
A City, that doth store of people yeild?
If all things happen to thee prosperously,
Where wilt thou find so kind a wife as I?
Like a wax taper I burn with desire,
Or like sweet incense in the funeral fire;

An

And still I wish, Aeneas would but stay,
Aeneas I do think on night and day.
 He careless of my love, and gifts doth seem,
 Had I been wise, I had not car'd for him.
 Yet I cannot hate Aeneas, although he
 Doth plot some unkind dealing against me.
 Of thy unfaithfulness I do complain,
 Having complain'd, I love thee more again.
 Spare me, O Venus, since thou art his mother ;
 Help me, O Cupid, since thou art his brother ;
 Soften his heart, that he may milder prove,
 And be a souldier in the tents of love.
 And since to love him I think it no shame,
 O may he love me with a mutual flame !
 Thou art some false Aeneas I do find,
 Thou do'st not bear thy mothers gentle mind.
 Stones, Rocks, and Oakes are hard like to thy brest,
 More merciless than any salvage beast,
 Or than the seas, which winds do now incense,
 Yet with contrary winds thou wouldest go hence :
 Winter to stay thy journey hence affayes,
 Look how the Easterne winds the waves do raise !
 Then to the winds let me beholding be,
 Though for thy stay, I had rather owe to thee.
 But I see rugged seas, and blustring wind
 More just and gentle are, than thy false mind.
 To untimely death I would not have thee coose,
 (Although deserv'd) while thou from me dost run.
 Is thy life so cheap, or hatred such at most,
 That thou wilt leave me, though thy life it cost ?
 The winds, and waves, their fury will appease,
 When Triton drives his blew steeds o're the seas.
 Would thy affections would change with the wind !
 They will, if thou bear'ft not a cruel mind.

Had'st

Had'st thou not known the Seas, what wouldst thou do ?
 Since having try'd it, thou wilt trust it too.
 Though to weigh Anchor the smooth sea perswade thee ;
 Yet in the Ocean dangers may invade thee.
 The sea doth favour no unfaithful men,
 But for unfaithfulness doth punish them.
 Specially such as do their sweet-hearts wrong,
 Since naked Venus from the green sea sprung.
 I take care for him, that would me forsake,
 And am afraid the sea should thee ship-wreck.
 Live, for bad fame is worse then death can be,
 When the world shall say that thou hast kill'd me.
 Suppose a storm at sea should thee assail ;
 Would not thy courage then begin to quail ?
 Thy false oaths then would come into my mind,
 And Dids whom thou kill'dst by being unkind,
 My bloody shape would hideously appear
 Before thy eyes, with loose long-spreading hairs
 Then thou wouldst say, this thundring storm is sent Justly, for my deserved punishment.
 Untill thou maist go safely, do but stay ;
 It would comfort me, if thou wouldest delay
 Thy voyage ; spare Ascanius thy son,
 Though I by thee to untimely death do come.
 What have Ascanius, or those gods deserv'd
 Drowning, which were by thee from fire preserv'd ?
 But though thou brag'dst to me ; yet I do fear,
 Thy gods and father thou didst never bear
 Upon thy shoulders, through the flaming fire ;
 But I am jealous that thou wert a lyer ;
 For I am not the first, whom thou didst wrong,
 Or first deceive with thy alluring tongue.
Ascanius mother too by thee was left,
 And thy unkindness her of life bereft.

Thou

Thou told'st me so much, which I now believe,
 And the sad story made my heart to grieve ;
 And that the gods do hate thee it appears,
 VVho hadst wander'd by Sea and Land seven years,
 Dronen by storms I did thee entertain,
 And gave thee all, ere I scarce knew thy name ;
 And would that I had only been content
 To have entertain'd thee, and no further wear,
 For I should happy be if Fame would die,
 And never tell how I with thee did lie.
 That day was fatal, when a showre us drove
 To meet together in a silent Cave.
 Me thought I heard the Nymphs begin to howle,
 The Furies at that present time did scowle.
 Now thou dost punish me for Sichaeus sake,
 To whom my faith I then did violate,
 And sure my ghost will even blush for shame,
 VVhen after death we two do meet again.
Sichaeus Statue in a sacred place
 Stands cover'd with leaves, and a woollen case :
 From whence me thought a hollow voice did say,
 And sometimes call Elisa Come away.
 I come, and yet the fault that I have done
 Is the cause that I am so slow to come.
 Pardon me, since that no base fellow wrought
 My ruine, and this may excuse my fault.
 Since he from Yesus and Archises came,
 I hoped that he faithful would remain.
 And though I err'd, I had a good intent ;
 Of his falsehood, not my error I repent ;
 But as at first, so now at last I find,
 " That fortune still doth prove to me unkind,
 My brother at the sacred Altar kill'd
 My husband, and his blood for wealth he spill'd,

And

And after like a banish'd creature I
 From my own Country was enforc'd to fly.
 Scaping my brother, strangers here receiv'd me,
 And bought this land which I would have giv'n thee;
 And built this City, compassing it withall,
 Even round about with a defensive wall.
 Then sudden wars did me straightway invade,
 Before that I the City gates had made :
 And many suiters did of me approve,
 Who all did come to woe, and win my love.
 Now to Iarbas I yeild me up at leasure,
 Since thou hast obtain'd of me thy own pleasure.
 My brother in my blood desires to stain
 His hand, by whom my husband first was slayn.
Æneas, do not thou presume to touch
 The Altars of those gods, who would me much
 By thy presumptuous prayers be profan'd,
 " Lift not unto the gods an impure hand;
 For if to worship them thou shouldest aspire,
 They would be sorry that they scap'd the fire.
 And that I am with Child too it may be,
 And that the fruits of love now grow in me.
 And as thou hast the mother first undone,
 So to untimely death my babe shall come.
 So that Ascanius his unborn brother
 Shall die, like an unripe fruit in his mother,
 But Mercury for staying here hath chid thee,
 I would he had for coming too forbid thee.
 And I do wish the Trojans had ne're found,
 Nor landed on the Carthaginian ground.
 Tost with contrary winds, thou hast long time
 Soug'it that land which Apollo did assign.
 To return to Troy thou wouldest not take such pain,
 If Hector liv'd, and Troy did stand again.

Thou seek not Simeis, but swift Tybris River,
And shalt be a stranger when thou comest thither ;
Which thou shalt not discover, nor behold,
Untill perhaps thou art in years grown old.
But rather take this Kingdom, and the wealth
Of Pigmallion, as a dowry to my self.
Let ancient Troy in Carthage now remain,
Take thou the Royal Scepter and here raign.
If thou, or else thy young son Julus are,
Desirous to get honour by the war ;
Here thou shalt find a foe to overcome,
For sometimes the red colours and the drum
Do banish peace, therefore I intreat of thee
As thou lov'st thy Countries gods, and company,
Spare me ; I beg it by thy brothers darts,
Young Cupid that doth wound all mortal hearts.
So may thy Trojans still victorious be,
And Troy's destruction end thy misery.
So may Aescanius in his youth be blest,
So may Achilles bones still softly rest.
Though I offer thee my self, do not reject me ;
What is my fault, but that I do affect thee ?
I am not come of the Mycenian blood,
By friends, or father, thou art not withstood.
Or if to call me wife thou do'st disdain,
Call me thy Hostess, I will take that name.
Or with any other name thou shalt assign,
I am content, so Dido may be thine.
I know the seas, that beat the Affrick shoar,
At certain seasons may be passed o're ;
When the wind stands fair, thou wilt sail away,
Now thy ships in the weedy heaven stay.
The time of thy departure let me know,
I'll not stay thee, if thou desir'st to go.

But yet thy company desire some rest,
To rig, and trim thy torn ships were best.
O ! if I have deserved any way
Of thee, I beg of thee a while to stay,
Until the sea grow calme, and till my love
By use of time more temperate do prove,
That I may learn, by length of time to be
Valiant, in suffering of adversity.
If not, to kill my self is my intent,
If to be cruel to me thou art bent.
For I do wish, thou couldst behold or see,
In what sad posture I do write to thee.
One hand to write unto thee doth afford,
The other hand doth hold thy Trojan sword:
And down my cheeks the trickling tears do slide
On the sword, which shal with my blood be dy'd.
It was thy fatal gift, and it may be
To send me to my grave, thou gav'st it me;
And though this first do wound my outward part,
Yet cruel love long since did wound my heart.
O sister Asza, thou that counsell'dst me
To yeeld to love, shalt now my funeral see.
On th'urne, to which my ashes they commit,
Elisa wife to Sicarius shall be writ.
And these two verses shall engraven be
Upon the marble that doth cover me;
Ascas did to me my death afford,
For Dido kill'd her self with his own sword.

The Argument of the eighth Epistle.

Hermione the daughter of Menelaus; and Helena, was by Tyndarus her Grandfather by the mothers side, to whom Menelaus had committed the government of his house, while he went to Troy, betrothed to Or.nes, the son of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra. Her father Menelaus not knowing thereof, had betrothed her to Tyr.bus, the son of Achilles, who at last returned from the Trojan wars, stole ble away Hermione. But the hating Pyrrhus and loving Orestes, admonishes him by this Letter, that she might be easily taken from Pyrrhus; and she obtained her desire. For Orestes being freed from his madness, for murdering Aegisthus and his mother, he slew Pyrrhus in Apollo's Temple, and took her again.

HERMIONE to ORESTES.

Hermione writes to him that was of late
Her husband, now anothers wife by fate.
Pyrrhus, Achilles stout son takes delight
To keep me from thee against law and right.
I did strive with him, but my force did fail,
A womans strength could not gainst him prevail.
Pyrrhus, quoth I, what dost thou do ? ere long,
My Lord on thee will surely revenge this wrong.
But of Orestes name he would not hear,
But drag'd me home even by my loosen'd hair.
Should the barbarous foe Lacrimosa take,
He could but thus of me a captive make.
And conquering Greece us'd not Andromache,
When they set fire of Troy, as he us'd me.
But Orestes if th'art toucht with this despight,
Then fetch me back again, I am thy right.
To fetch thy stollen sattel thou wilt go,
Why then to fetch thy wife art thou so slow ?
By thy father why dost not example take ?
VVho by a just war did his wife fetch back.
Had he led in his Court an idle life,
Thy mother then had been young Paris wife.
If thou do come, thou needst not to provide
A fleet, or store of Souldiers beside,
Yet so I might be fetched back again,
A husband for his wife may war maintain.

And Atreus was Uncle unto either,
 So that thou art my husband and my brother.
 O ! husband then, and brother, help thou me,
 For these two names implore some help of thee.
 My grand-father Tyndarus, grave in his life,
 Deliver'd me unto thee as thy wife.
 My father unto Pyrrhus promis'd me,
 But my grand-father would dispose of me.
 When I marry'd thee, I did to none belong,
 If Pyrrhus marry me, he doth thee wrong.
 My father will let us love, and enjoy,
 For he was wounded by the winged boy,
 And will permit us to love one another,
 In the like sort as he did love my mother.
 As he my mother's husband was, thou art
 My husband, Pyrrhus playeth Paris part.
 Though he boast deeds were by his father done,
 Thy father by his actions fame hath won.
Achilles did for a common souldier stand,
 But Agamemnon Captains did command.
Telops, and his father thy Ancestors were,
 Thou art but five descents from Jupiter.
 Nor didst thou courage want, though thou didst kill
 Thy father ; and his precious blood didst spill ;
 Would thy valour had been happier employ'd,
 Though he were unwillingly by thee destroy'd.
 For thou Aegylus kill'dst unluckily,
 And didst fulfill thy hapless fate thereby.
 When Achilles urgeth this one fault of thine,
 And before me doth make it a great crime ;
 My blushing colour, and my heart doth rise,
 And my old love revives ; and glowing lies
 Within my brest, if that Orestes be
 By any one accused 'to Hermione.

For then I have no strength in any part,
 As if a sword were thrust into my heart,
 I weep, and then my tears my anger show
 Which like two Rivers down my bosome flow.
 Plenty of tears I only have, which rise,
 Wetting my cheeks from the springs of my eyes.
 And this sad fate, which happens unto me,
 Hath been the fortune of our family.
 I need not tell how Jupiter became,
 To deceive us, a fair and milk-white Swan.
 How Hippodamia in a strangers Chariot,
 Over the *Helle*spont was swiftly carried.
 My mother Helen, in Paris took delight,
 For whom the Grecians ten whole years did fight.
 My Grandfather, my Sister and each brother
 Began to weep, for the losse of my mother ;
 And Leda did her earnest prayers prefer
 Unto the gods, and to her Jupiter ;
 While I did tear my hair and to her cry'd,
 Mother, must I without you here abide ?
 And left that I should not be thought to be
 Of Peleus most unhappy progeny ;
 My mother being with Paris gone away,
 I unto Pyrrhus was soon made a prey.
 If Acbilles had escap'd Apollo's bow,
 He would have then condemn'd his son, I know.
 He knew by Brisea loss, which he could not brook,
 That from their husbands wifes should not be took,
 Why are the gods thus cruel unto me !
 What sad star rul'd at my Nativity ?
 For in my younger years I was bereft
 Of my mother and was of my father left,
 Who went unto the wars, yet ne'retheleſs
 Although they liv'd, yet I was Parentleſs,

Nor could delight my mother, as you see
 Children will do, with stammering flattery ;
 Nor round about her neck my weak armes clap,
 While she would fondly set me on her lap.
 Nor did she teach me how to dress my head,
 Nor did she bring me to my marriage bed,
 For when she did return (truth Ile not smother)
 I did not know her then to be my mother.
 I knew that she was Helen by her beauty,
 She knew not me when as I did my duty.
 'Mongst all these miseries I most happy am,
 That Orestes for my husband I did gain.
 Yet he, alas, shall from me taken be,
 Unless he do fight for himself and me :
Pyrrhus hath took me, and doth me enjoy,
 This is all I got by the fall of Troy.
 Yet while the Sun with his bright rayes doth shone,
 My sorrows are more gentle all that time.
 But when at night with grief I go to bed,
 And on my pillow rest my weary head ;
 The tears, when I should entertain soft sleepe,
 Spring in my eyes, and I begin to weeps
 And from my husbands side as far off lye,
 As if he were to me an enemy.
 Sometimes through grief forgetting where I am,
 I have toucht some part of Pyrrhus, and again
 I have pluckt back my hand ; for I did grutch,
 That I his body with my hand should touch.
 Such was my hatred, that I did esteem
 My hands by touching him, had polluted been.
 And it doth often chance that I do call
Pyrrhus, Orestes, and it doth befall
 I love my error, as a high of luck,
 When I have thy name, for his name mistook,

By

By Jepiter, from whom our house did rise,
Who ruleth both the Sea, the Land, and skies,
I pray, by thy Fathers, and thy Uncles bones,
Which do rest underneath their marble stones,
That I may presently resign my life,
Or else may be once more Orestes wife.

The

The Argument of the ninth Epistle.

Jupiter having joyned three nighes in one, begot Hercules on Alcestea, in the shape of her husband Asphytris; Eurythous King of the Mycarians, by Junes subtlety persuades him to attempe difficult labours, so to endanger his life. Yet he by strength and policy, alwayes got the victory; and to obtain Dianira for his Wife, Achelous a River of Etolia, after many changes of shapes, he overthrew in the figure of a Bull; yet though he overcame many Monsters, he was overcome by love. For Euryalus King of Oeebalia denying him his daughter Iole, formerly promised unto him, he took his City, slew Euryalus and obtained Iole, with whose love he was so blinded, that at her command he layd by his Lyons Skin and Club, and putting on Womens cloaths, sat and syun amongst her Maids; and was as subject as Iole, as he had been to Omphale Queen of Lydia, on whom he bore Lamus. His wife Deianira Daughter of Oenus King of Calydon, understanding of his base and servile doctage, writes to him, and layes before him his former worthy acts, that this present disgrace by comparison with them, might appear more to the life. But as she was writing she understood of Hercules suffering, by the shirt she had sent him dip't in the blood of the Centaur Nessus, to retain him from wounding affection (for so had Nessus perswaded her, whom in passing over the River Evensus, Hercules flew with a payson'd arrow) being much grieved hereat, she clears her self that she did not thereby intend his destruction, but the regaining of his love, and concludes with a *Thras*hal resolution.

the

DEIANIRA to HERCULES.

IAm glad thou Oeebalia hast won,
For husbands honour doth the wife become.
But I am sorry that a Captives beauteous look
Should take the conquerer, that hath her took.
When Fame the sad report at first did bring
To the Greek Cities on her nimble wing;
Me thought this action was not of the colour
Of those brave deeds, which shew thy glory fuller;
Whom Juno, nor her labours ever broke,
Iole made him yeild unto her yoke.
Euryalus is glad, and Jupiters wife,
To see this action blot thy fair spent life:
Nor can I think three nights were joyn'd in one
At thy begetting or conception.
Venus is worse then Juno thy step-dame,
For by oppressing thee she rais'd thy fame.

But

But Venus makes thee basely think it meet,
 To put thy humble neck beneath her feet.
 The world, environ'd round with the blew seas,
 Was settled by thy conquering hand in peace,
 By which both sea and land enjoy sweet rest,
 Thy fame is spread abroad from East to West.
Hercules strength, and Atlas' were even,
 For Hercules and Atlas bore up heaven.
 But if with lust thy former deeds thou stain,
 Thy glory turneth to thy great shame.
 In thy Cradle thou were like unto thy father,
 When thou didst strangle two Snakes joyn'd together.
 Thy child-hood and thy man-hood I do see,
 But far unlike, and far most different be.
 Thy beginning was far better than thy end,
 The last act of thy life doth most offend.
 Wild beasts, and chencies thou couldst overcome,
 But love the victory over thee hath won.
 Some think I am well married, because I am
 Wife to great Hercules; that very name
 Is happiness, besides my father-in-law
 Is Jove, whose thunder keeps the world in awe.
 But I am over-matched with thee now,
 Unequal Oxen aukwardly do plough.
 Thy honour like a burthen I do carry,
 " She's fitly matcht, that doth her equal marry.
 For Hercules is absent from me still,
 While he fierce monsters and wild beasts doth kill,
 Thus widowed, I offer sacrifice,
 Lest thou shouldst be slain by thy enemies.
 Me thinks I see how thou dost take delight,
 With Serpents, Boars, and Lyons still to fight:
 Strange visions in my sleep to me appear,
 And my dreams oft put me in fear.

Sometimes

Sometimes I do believe the common fame,
Sometimes I hope, sometimes I fear again,
My mother is from home, and doth complain,
Because her beauty did a god enflame.

Anthyris thy own father is from home,
And little Hilus also thy young son.

I only do perceive Eurythess hath
Made thee a sacrifice to Juno's wrath.

To perform labours he did thee perswade,
Which done, the goddess wrath is not allay'd.

And to encrease my grief thou dost approve

A captive maid, who is become thy love.

I will not mention how thou didst dally

With Auge in the sweet Parthenian valley.

Or how the Nymph Ormenes was defil'd,

And wantonly by thee was got with child :

Nor will I urge it as a fault, not I,

Thou didst with Thespius fifty daughters lye.

That which grieves me was thy adultery,

Which thou committest with thy Omphale,

And on her didst beget a bastard son,

To whom I must a mother-in-law become.

The winding River which they call Meander,

Who in his turning banks about doth wander,

Hath seen when Hercules a fine chain wore

On those shoulders which heavens weight once bore.

Didst thou not blush to wear a golden twist ?

Or bracelet made of pearl about thy wrist ?

Or that a golden bracelet should contain

Thy brawny armes which had so stoutly slain

The Nemean Lion, whose rough shaggy hide

Then didst wear on thy shoulder and left side ?

Nay besides this thou didst descend to wear

A Coif, or Kerchiffe on thy stubborn hair.

It were more fit thy Temples had been crown'd,
 With victorious wreaths, than with a fillet bound.
 Yet as if thou were some young girle, thou hast
 Worn Omphale's girdle round about thy waft.
 Thou thought'st not of fiery Diomede as then,
 Who fed his horses with the flesh of men.
 Had Buſſiris seen thee drest thus, he would be Affam'd that he had been o'recome by thee.
Anteus may knock off his bolts, and chain,
 And set his neck at liberty again.
 For what captive is there with patience can
 Suffer under such an effeminate man?
 Besides, amongst the Grecian Maids ('tis said)
 That thou didst sit, and spin, and wert afraid,
 Lest thy mistress Omphale, when she espi'd thee,
 Idle by chance, should frown on thee, and chide theo.
 And thy victorious hands did not then scorn
 To spin, which once such labours did perform.
 For thou didst draw the thred with thy huge thumb,
 And gav'st account at night what thou hast spun.
 Sometimes as thou sat'st spinning, thou hast broke
 With boisterous handling, both thy wheel and rock:
 And like a poor unhappy wretch, 'tis said,
 That of thy mistress thou wert so afraid,
 That if she chid thee, thou wouldest trembling stand,
 For fear of swadling with a Holly wind;
 And to win favour, thou wouldest often tell
 Of thy labours, which thou ought'st to conceal:
 Discourſing unto her how thou hadſt won
 Much honour, by those deeds which thou hadſt done;
 How in thy childhood thou didſt boldly tear
 The Hydra's speckled jawes, which hideous were;
 How thou didſt kill the Erimiſſibear Boar,
 Which on the ground lay weltring in his goar.

And

And then of Diomedes didst relate,
Who nail'd the heads of men upon his gate,
Fatting his pamper'd Horses with their flesh,
That thou didst his cruelty suppress ;
And how thou hadst the monster Cacus slain,
That kept his flocks upon the hills of Spain ;
And of three-headed Cerberus thou didst tell,
Who by his snaky hair thou drag'dst from hell :
And how the Hydra by thy hand was slain,
Whose heads being lopp'd off would grow forth again.
And of Anteus, whom thou crasht to death
Between thy arms, and didst squeeze out his breath.
And how the Centaures thou subdu'st by force
That were half men, and half like to a Horse.
When thou wert in soft silken robes array'd,
To tell these stories wert not thou disarray'd ?
Didst thou think whil'st thou didst thy labours tell,
That a woman's habit did become thee well ?
While Omphale hath took thy Lyons skin
Away from thee, and drest her self therein,
To boast now of thy valour it is vain,
For Omphale in thy stead playes the man :
For she in valour doth exceed thee far,
Since she hath conquer'd the conquerour ;
And by subiecting thee, she now hath won
The glory, which did unto thee belong.
O shame to think ! the skin which thou didst tear
Off the Lyons ribs, thy Omphale doth wear ;
Thou art deceiv'd, 'tis not the Lyons spoil ;
Thou foil'dst the Lyon, she thy self doth foil ;
And she that only knoweth how to spin,
To wear thy weapons also doth begin.
She takes the conquering Club into her hand,
And afterwards before her glas will stand,

Viewing her self, to see what she hath done,
If that her husbands weapons her become.
I could not believe, when I heard it said,
The sad report unto my heart convey'd
Much grief; but now my wretched eyes beheld
The Harlot Jole, that thy courage quell'd.
Such are my wrongs, that I must need reveal
My grief and sorrow I cannot conceal.
Thou broughtst her through the City in despight,
Because I should behold the hated sight;
Not like a Captive, with her hair unbound,
And a dejected look fixt on the ground;
But of rich cloth of gold her garments were,
Such as thy self in Phrygia did wear.
She in her passage graciously did look
On the people as if she had Hercules took;
As if her father liv'd and did command
Oeclalia, which was raised by thy hand,
Deianira it may be thou wilt forsake,
And of thy former whore a wife will make;
So that Hymen shall both joyn the heart and hands
Of Hercules and Jole in his bands.
When in my mind these passages I behold,
My hands and limbs with fear grow stiff and cold.
In me thou formerly didst take delight,
And for my sake two several times didst fight;
Plucking off Acbela horns, who after
Did hide his head in his own muddy water.
And Nessus was slain by the poison'd head
Of thy arrow, whose blood dy'd the River red.
But O alas! I heard abroad by fame,
Thou art tormented with much grief and pain,
By the shirt dipt in his blood, which I sent thee,
But yet indeed no harm at all I meant ther.

If it be so, then what am I become ?
 What is it that my furious love hath done ?
 O Deianira straight resolve to die,
 So end at once thy grief and misery.
 Shall this same poison'd shirt tear off his skin ?
 And wilt thou live that hath the causer bin
 Of all his torment ? No, though not my life,
 My death shall shew that I was Hercules wife.
 And, Meleager, I will shew thereby
 My self thy sister, I'm resolv'd to die.
 O unhappy fate ! Oeneas royal throne
 (My Father who is very aged grown)
Agris hath, Tydeus in forraign land
 Doth wander still, and in the fatal brand
Meleager perish'd, and my mother kill'd
 Her self, and with her hand her own blood spill'd.
 Then why doth Deianira doubt to die ?
 And so conclude this wicked Tragedy ;
 Yet this one suit to thee I only move ;
 And beg this of thee for our former love ;
 That thou wouldest not believe, or think I meant
 To procure thy death, by that gift I sent.
 For when the cruel Centaur bleeding lay
 With thy arrow in his brest, he then did lay,
 This blood, if thou the vertue of it prove,
 Will cause affection, and procure true love.
 But now his treachery I have understood ;
 For I dipt a shirt into his poison'd blood ;
 And sent it, which hath caus'd thy misery ;
 O Deianira straight resolve to die.
 Farewell my Father, George too farewell,
 Farewell my brother and Country where I dwell.
 And I do bid farewell to the day-light,
 Of which my eyes shall never more have sight.

Farewell to Hyllus my young little son,
Farewell my husband; Death, I come, I come.

The Argument of the tenth Epistle.

MARS the son of Jupiter and Europa, because the Ascanians had treacherously slain his son Andragoras, enforced them by a heavy war to send him every year as a tribute, seven young Men, and many young Virgins to be devoured by the Minotaurs, which by Dædalus Art Pasiphae had by a Bull, while her husband Minos was at the Athenian wars. The lot falling on Theseus, he was sent amongst the rest; but Ariadne instructed him how to kill the Minotaurs, and return again out of the Labyrinth, as Cædmon saith, Errabunda regis tenus virginis filo.

Guiding his steps, which she led,
By a Clew of slender thread.

Afterward Theseus departing from Crete with Ariadne and Theseus, he arriv'd at the Isle Naxos, where Europa admonished him to leave Ariadne, and he accordingly left her when she was fast asleep; As soon as she awaked, she wrot this Letter, complaining of Theseus cruelty and ingratitude, and in a pitiful manner intreats him to come back again, and take her into his ship.

ARIADNE to THESEUS.

I Have found all kindes of beasts much more milde
And gentle than thy self, who haft beguil'd
My trust: for it had been more safe for me,
To have believ'd a salvage beast, than thee.
This letter, Theseus, from thence doth come,
Where thou didst leave me, and away didst run;
When I was fast asleep, then thou didst leave me,
Watching that opportunity to deceive me:
It was at that time when the heavens strew
Upon the earth their sweet and pearly dew.
And the first waking birds did now begin,
In the cool boughs to tune their notes and sing:
I being half asleep and half awake,
Yet so much knowledge had, that for thy sake,
With my hand I felt about thy warm place,
Thinking indeed my Theseus to embrace:
I felt about the bed, but he was gone,
I felt about again, but there was none.
Then with my wretched hand I strok my breast,
And tore my loosen'd hair, that was unrest.

The Moon shin'd bright so that I looked o're
 To the sea-ward, but saw nothing but the shore ;
 Now here, and there confusedly I ran,
 The heavy sand did my swift feet detain :
 At last I called Theseus on the shore ;
 The hollow Rocks thy Name did back restore ;
 The echo call'd as many times as I,
 And seem'd to help me in my misery.
 There was a Mountain top with some few bushes,
 Under whose rocky sides the Sea still rushes :
 On it I clamber'd up, love gave me strength,
 Whence I could see far unto sea at length :
 From hence (for I the winds did cruel find)
 Discern'd a ship that sail'd with the North wind ;
 I saw it, or I thought I did behold
 Ir, which did make my heart half dead, and cold :
 Yet sorrow would not suffer me to lie
 Long in this Trance, but conaming out of't I
 Cry'd out, O Theseus ! whither dost thou run ?
 Return, O Theseus, and to me back come,
 Turn back thy ship again for to take me,
 Thou wantest one yet of thy company.
 Thus did I cry, and strike my breast betwixt,
 While blows and words were both together mixt.
 Though thou could'st not hear me, yet I did stand
 Spreading my armes abroad upon the land,
 That thou might see me ; and a white flag hung
 To make thee see me, who from me did'st run.
 Thy ship at last did sail quite out of my sight,
 And then the tears ran down my cheeks outright.
 For how could my sad eyes but chuse to weep,
 After thy sails out of my sight did slip ?
 Abroad I wander'd with loose flowing hair,
 Like women that by Bacchus enraged are.

Sometimes

Sometimes I looking unto sea would sit
 On a stone, as void as the stone of wit :
 Then to the bed I walkt, where he had lain,
 Which never should receive us more again ;
 And it a pleasure unto me did seem,
 To touch the warm place where thy limbs had been :
 And in'the very place I down would lye,
 With weeping tears, and thus begin to cry :
 Sweet bed, we both have lain on thee together,
 As two lay down, two should have risen together.
 But I on this forsaken Isle am left,
 Of men and all humanity bereft.
 The sea encompasseth this Island round,
 No ship or Pilot from this Isle is bound.
 Suppose I could a ship and wind command,
 I dare not sail back to my Fathers land.
 Though my ship through the smooth sea did glide on,
 And winds stood fair, I am banisht from home,
 And from Crete, that a hundred Cities had,
 Where Jove was nursed when he was a lad.
 I betrai'd my Father by that plot I fram'd,
 And Country, where he long uprightly reignd.
 And left thou in the Labyrinth hadst dy'd,
 Gave thee a Clue of thred thy steps to guide.
 By those past dangers thou didst swear to me,
 That thou, while I did live, would'st constant be.
 I live, and find thee false, if't may be said
 She lives, that by a false man is betray'd.
 Would thy Club had kill'd me, as't did my brother,
 Then in my death thou all my wrongs might'st smoothe.
 Now I conceive what I must suffer here,
 And what I may endure, doth urge my fear.
 A thousand shapes of death methinks I see,
 The fear of death is worse then death can be.

Now left some Wolfe should come, I am in fear,
 Who with his greedy teeth my limbs should tear ;
 Perhaps this land doth yellow Lyons breed,
 And cruel Tygers from this Isle proceed.
 Perhaps great sea-calves on the shore abide,
 Or else the fword may pierce my tender side.
 Or like a Captive I may be enchain'd,
 And unto servile labour be constrain'd ;
 Whose Father Athena was, and whose Mother
 Was Phœbus daugheer, which I need not smother,
 And that which rather should remember'd be,
 That I was once betrothed unto thee.
 If I look to the shore, the land or sea,
 The sea and land do seem to threaten me.
 If to heaven, to the gods I dare not pray,
 But I am left unto the wild beasts a prey.
 The men that here inhabit I distrust,
 Being deceiv'd by thee my fears are just.
 I wish now that Androgeus did live,
 Whose death occasion of that tax did give.
 I wish, O Theseus, thy Club had not slain
 The monster, half a beast, and half a man.
 Would I had not given thee a Clew of thred,
 By which thy steps in coming back were led.
 I wonder not thou got'st the victory,
 Or that this Cretian beast was slain by thee.
 Thou hadst an iron breast, which was so arm'd,
 So that thou couldst not by his hornes be harm'd.
 Sure an obdurate Adamant was i'th',
 And Theseus was all o're as hard as flint.
 O cruel sleep ! why did I flumbeing lye ?
 Would I had slept unto eternitie.
 O cruel winds ! why did ye stand so fair,
 As if ye did desire to breed my care ?

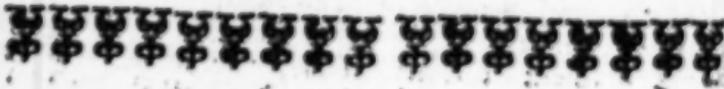

O cruel hand of thine ! which hath slain me,
And my poor brother by infidelity.
My sleep, the wind, and thou, did all conspire,
And to betray a maid did all desire.
Now at my death my mother shall not weep,
Nor close mine eyes up in eternal sleep.
My hapless ghost shall wander in the ayre,
To embalme my body no friend shall care.
Sea-Vultures shall upon my carcals light,
For I shall have at all no funeral Rite.
But unto Athens when thou art come home,
Then thou sitting upon thy royal Throne,
Shalt tell how thou the Mistake didst slay,
Out of the Labyrinth finding the right way ;
And tell amongst thy afts, how thou hast left
Me on this Island, of all help bereft.

Agæus, nor yet Aethra cannot be
Thy Parents, Rocks were Parents unto thee.
If from thy shys decks thou hadst spied me,
My sad looks unto pity had mov'd thee.
Think now thou seest me standing on a Rock,
Whose chalky sides the beating waves do mock.
See how my hair is o're my shoulders spread,
My garments wet with tears, that I have shed.
And how my body trembling too and fro,
Like shaking corne, which the North wind doth blow ;
Or like some mis-shap'd Letter I do stand,
That hath been wrigen by a trembling hand.
To urge my merit I dare not presume,
" No thanks are due to service that is done.
Yet there's no reason thou shouldst punish me
With death, because from death I saved thee.

To thee my hands I heave up and do spread,
Which with beating my breast are wearied.
I entreat thee by my hair, which I do spread,
And by my tears for thy unkindness shed,
Turn back thy ship, O Theseus, for my sake;
Though I am dead, my carcass with thee take;

Th

The Argument of the eleventh Epistle.

MAcarus and Canace, the son and daughter of Æolus, King of the winds, did love one another, & thinking to colour over their incestuous fault with natural affection, Canace brought forth a son, and sending it out of the Court to be养 at abroad, the unhappy infant cryed, and so discovered it self to his Grandfather, who incensed with his childrens wickedness, commanded the innocent infant to be be cast forth unto Dogges: and by one of his guard fene a sword to Caesar, as a silent remembrance of her desert, wherewith she killed her self. Yet before her death, she declares by this Epistle to Macareus, who was fled into the Temple of Apollo, her own misfortune; entreating him to gather up the childe bones, and lay them with her in the same Urn or funeral Pitcher.

CANACE to MACAREUS.

IF blotted Letters may be understood,
 Receive this Letter blotted with my blood.
 My right hand holds a pen, my left a sword,
 My paper lyes before me on the boord.
 Thus Canace doth to her brother write,
 This posture yeilds my father much delight:
 Who I do wish would a spectator be,
 As he is Author of my Tragedy.
 Who fiercer then winds blowing from the East,
 With dry cheeks would behold my wounded breast.
 For since to rule the winds he hath commission,
 He's of his subjects cruel disposition.
 Over the Northern, and South winds he reigne;
 The wings of th' East and West winds he restrains.
 And yet although the winds he doth command,
 His sudden anger he cannot withstand.
 The Kingdom of the winds he can restrain,
 But over his own vices cannot raign.
 For what although my Ancestors have been
 Unto the gods and Jupiter akin?
 Now in my fearful hand I hold a sword,
 That fatal gift, which must my death afford.
 O Macareus, would that I had dy'd,
 Before we were in close embraces ty'd.
 More then a sister ought I did affect thee,
 More then a brother ought thou didst respect me.

For

For I did feel, how Cupid with his dart
 (Of whom I oft had heard) did wound my heart.
 My colour straightway did wax green and pale,
 My stomach to my meat began to fail.
 I could not sleep, the night did seem a year,
 I often sigh'd, when no body did hear.
 Yet why I sighed, I no cause could shew ;
 I lov'd, and yet what love was did not know.
 My old Nurse found out how my pulse did move,
 And she first told me that I was in love :
 But when I blushed with a down-cast look,
 Which silent signes she for confession took.
 But now the burthen of my swelling womb
 Grew heavy, being to full ripeness come.
 What herbs and medicines did not she, and I
 Use, to enforce abortive delivery,
 Conceal'd from thee ? Yet Art could not prevail,
 The quickned child grew strong, our Art did fail.
 And now nine Moons were fully gone and past,
 The tenth in her bright Chariot made great hast.
 I know not whence my sudden gripes did grow :
 Nor what pains belong'd to childbirth did know :
 I cry'd out, but my Nurse my words did stay,
 And stopt my mouth, as I there crying lay.
 What shall I do ? gripes force me to complain ;
 But my Nurse, and fear of crying-out restrain.
 So that I did suppress my groans, and cryes,
 And drunk the tears that flow'd down from my eyes.
 While thus Lucina did deny her aid,
 Fearing my fault in death should be betray'd.
 Thou by my side most lovingly didst lye,
 Tearing thy hair to see my misery ;
 And with kind words thy sister thou didst cherish,
 Praying that two might not at one time perish.

And

And thou didst put me still in hope of life,
 Saying dear sister thou shalt be my wife.
 These words reviv'd me, when I was half dead,
 So that I presently was brought to bed.
 Thou didst rejoice, but fear did me a-fright,
 To hide it from my father Aeolus sight.
 The careful Nurse the new born childe did hide
 In Olive boughs, with swadling vine leaves ty'd :
 And so a solemn sacrifice did fain ;
 The people and my father believ'd the same.
 Being near the gate, the child that straight did cry,
 To his grandfather was betray'd thereby ;
Aeolus tearing forth the child, discries
 Their cunning and pretended sacrifice.
 As the sea trembles when light winds do blow,
 Or as an Aspen leaf shakes to and fro,
 Even so my pale and trembling limbs did make
 The bed whereon I lay begin to shake.
 He comes to me, my fault he doth proclaim,
 And he could scarce from striking me contain.
 I could do nothing else but blush, and weep,
 My tongue ty'd up with fear did silent keep.
 He commanded my s'n should be straightway
 Cast forth, and made to beasts and birds a prey.
 And then it cry'd, so that you would have thought,
 His crying had his Granifather besought
 To pity him : what grief it was to me,
 Dear brother, you may guess, when I did see,
 When I saw my childe carried to the Wood,
 To feed the mountian Wolves, that live by blood.
 When thus my child unto the woods was sent,
 My father out of my bed-chamber went.
 Then I did beat my tender breast at last,
 And tore my cheeks, his sentence being past.

When

When straightway one of my Fathers Guard came in,
And with a sad look did this message bring :
Ealus sends this sword, and doth desire
Thee use it, as thy merit doth require.
His will (quoth I) be done, I'le use his sword,
My Fathers gift shall my sad death afford.
O Father, shall this sword the portion be,
And dowry which you mean to give to me ?
O Hymæa put out thy deceived light,
And nimbly now betake thy self to fight:
Ye Furies bring your smoaky Torches all,
To light the wood at my sad funeral.
O sisters, may you far more happily marry
Than I, that by my own fault did miscarry.
Yet what could be my new-born babes offence,
Which might his Grandfather so much incense ?
Of death, alas, he could not worthy be :
For my offence, he's punished for me.
O Son ! thou breed'st thy mother much annoy,
No sooner bred, but beasts do thee destroy.
O Son the pledge of my unhappy love,
One day thy day of birth and death doth prove.
I had not time t'imbalme thee with my tears,
Nor in thy funeral fire to throw thy hairs ;
To give thee one cold kiss I had no power,
For the wild greedy beasts did thee devour.
But I sweet child, will straightway die with thee,
I will not long a childless Parent be.
And thou, O brother, since it is in vain
For me to hope to see thee once again ;
Gather the small remainder, which the wild
And salvage beast have left of thy young child.
And with his mothers bones, let them have room,
Within one Urne, or in one narrow Tomb.

Weep

Weep at my funeral; who can reprove thee;
For shewing love to her that once did love thee?
And here at last I do entreat thee still,
To perform thy unhappy sisters will;
For I will kill my self without delay,
And so my fathers hard command obey.

Th

The Argument of the Twelfth Epistle.

Jason being a lusty comely young man: as soon as he arrived at Colchos, Medea the Daughter of Aea King of Colchos, and Hector, fancied and entertained him; and upon promise of marriage, instructed him how he should obtain the beauty he desired. Having gotten the golden Fleece, he fled away with Medea. Her father Aea pursuing after them, she tears in pieces her brother Adraste, limbs, whom she had had taken with her, thereby to stay her father while he gathered up his Sons bones. And so at length safely arriving in Thessaly, Iason renewed his Father Aeson age, by Medea help, who also made Perseus Daughters kill their Father. For pretending that she would make him young, as she had done Aeson, she periwaded his Daughters, with a knife to let out all his old black blood, that she might infuse new fresh blood instead thereof. His Daughters having done so, Perseus straightway dyed; Iason hereupon, or for some other cause, repudiates Medea, and marries Creusa the daughter of Ceaus King of Cerinthi; Medea herewith enraged writes to Iason, expostulating with him of his ingratitude, and threatens speedy revenge, unless he receive her again.

M E D E A to J A S O N.

AT that time Queen of Cerinthi I did reign,
When thou didst seek by my art help to gain,
I wish my thred of life, which then was spun
By the three sisters, had been cut and done;
Then might Medea have dy'd innocent;
My life since then hath been a punishment.
Woe's me that ere the lusty youth of Greece
Sail'd hither, for to fetch the golden Fleece.
Would Colches never had their Argos seen,
Would the Grecians ne're on our shoar had been;
Why was I with thy lovely brown hair took?
Or with thy tempting tongue and comely look?
Or at least when thy ship came to our shore,
Bringing thy self, with gallants many more,
I might have let thee run and found a death
By those fiery Oxen with their flaming breath;
I might have suffer'd thee to sow that seed,
Whence armed men did spring up and proceed,
That the lower might by his own tillage die,
When each ear of cornie did prove an enemy.

They

They had prevented then thy treachery,
And kept me both from grief and misery.
To upbraid thy ingratitude pleases me,
In this alone I can triumph o're thes.
For when thy ship arrived at the shore
Of Calebos, where it nare had been before,
O then Medea was beloved there
Of thee, as thy new wife's beloved here.
My father was as rich as hers; he raign'd
O're Corinth, which twixt two Seas is contain'd.
My father posseid all the Land which lay
Between Pontus and snowy Scythia.
My father did thy Grecians entertain,
Affording Lodging to thee and thy train;
I saw thee then, then did of thee enquire,
And then thy love did set my heart on fire,
I saw thee, and that sight to love did turn,
While my heart did like a great Taper burn.
Thy beauty drew me to my destin'd fate,
And thy fair eyes my eyes did captivate
Which thou percevid'st, for who can love conceal'd?
Whose glowing flame doth it own selfe reveale
My father then commandied thee to yeake
Those Oxen that were to the plough ne're broak
For they were Mars his Oxen, whose horns were Sharp, and their breath did like a flashe appear.
They had braffe hoofs, and nostrils arm'd with braff,
Blakt with the breath that through them did passe.
And thou wert bid to sow in the large field
That seed which did an armed reape yield.
VVhich sprung up, would assail thee straight again;
Thou for thy harvest such a crop shouldest gain
And thy last labour was to charme a sleep
The Dragon, that the golden Helle did keep.

When Aetes said thus, you all straight rose,
And every one much discontentment shewes.
So that you did your purple scars forsake,
And then the Table they away did take.
Great Creens, daughter, thou didst now contemn,
And Crenas dowry could not help thee then.
Sadly thou didst depart, and discontent,
yet my weeping eyes on thee still were bent,
And as thou wentst away this one word fell,
In a soft murmur from my tongue; Farewell,
And when I went to bed, I never slep,
Wounded with love, all night: I griev'd and wept.
The fierce Bulls were alwayes before my eyes,
And the Armed men which from the earth did rise;
And then the watchfull Dragon did affright
My senses, and was still before my sight.
Thus love, and fear, my breast at once did trouble,
My love of thee did make my fear to double.
At last it chanced that early in the morning,
My loving sister came and found me mourning,
And lying on my face, with all my hair
Loose spread, the pillow wet with many a tear,
She and two sisters more did me invade,
With fair entreaties, for to help and aid
Jason, and his Thessalias, who did want
My assistance, I in love their suit did grant.
There is a wood so dark with thick-leav'd trees,
That the bright Sun but seldom through it sees:
There doth a Chappel of Diana's stand,
Whose golden statue there was rudely fram'd.
I know not whether this place is by thee
Forgotten, as thou hast forgotten me.
We being thither come, thou then didst break
Thy mind to me, and thus beganst to speak.

My life and fortunes are at thy command.
 My life and death are both within thy hand.
 You may let me perish if so be you will,
 But 'tis more noble to preserve then kill.
 Then by my present sorrows I entreat,
 Which you can ease, if you the word wouldest speak.]
 By thy kindred, and uncle Phœbus, who Sees all things that on earth we mortals do.
 By Diana's triple-face, and sacred rites,
 And Gods wherein this Nation delights.
 O Virgin have some pity at this time
 On me, and make me so for ever thine.
 And though I cannot hope the gods should be,
 So kind and favourable unto mee;
 Yet if you would be p'eaſed now to take
 A Thessalian, and him a husband make.
 Then I do promise, I will faithfull be,
 And vow, that I will marry none but thee.
 Let Juno be a witnesse to my vow,
 And Diana in whose Temp'e we are now.
 Thou took'ſt me by the hand, those words of thine
 A maidens fancy did straight way incline.
 For ſuch thy language was, as ſoon did move
 My honest heart to entertain thy love.
 By thy deceitfull tears I was betrayed,
 For they had rōwer to betray a Maid.
 So that the Bulls, whose breath like flames did ſmoak,
 I taught thee how to tame, and how to yoke.
 And thou didſt ſow the Dragons teeth for ſeed,
 Whence armed men did ſpring up and proceed.
 I, that did give thee those ſecuring arms,
 Grew pale to ſee those new-forung men in arms.
 When ſtraight those earth-bred brethren there in fight,
 Did ſlay each other in a bloody fight.

The watchful Dragon now the earth did sweep,
While he upon his scaly breast did creep.
Where was the Dowry of thy royal wife?
Or King of Cerisy? could they save thy life?
No it was I, that now am thus rejected,
And as a poor Enchantress disrespected.
I charm'd the Dragons flaming eyes asleep,
That thou mightst get the Fleece which he did keep.
My Father I betray'd and I forsook,
My Countrey, and with thee a voyage took.
Though my life a sad banishment should be,
I was content to wander still with thee.
Thou of my Maiden-head didst me deceive.
Who my Mother and my Sister both did leave.
Yet I left not my Brother; at that name,
Me thinks my pen stands still for very shame;
I fear to write that, which I did not fear
To do, 'twas I that did in pecces tear,
Thy scattered limbs, and when I had done so,
Guilty of thy blood, unto Sea did go.
And would the gods had drownd us in the sea,
Thou for deceit, I for credulity.
I wou'd our ship, as it along had past,
Our joyned bodies on some rock and dash'd,
Or breaking Scylla had devoured us then,
Stylla should punish such ungrateful men.
I wish Carybdis had then pleased been,
With his round whirling waves to suck us in.
But thou in safety art to Thebessly come,
Offering th: go'den-Heece which thou hast won,
Unto the gods. What should I mention
Pelas Daughters, whose intention
I wrong'd and made their virgin hands to kill
Their aged Father and his blood to spill?

Though

Though othes blame me, thou must praise me needs,
Since from my love of thee my guilt proceeds.
yet thou hast cast me off now ne're the letie,
O I want words, that may my griefe exprefie !

When thou didst bid me go, I did obey

Thy cruel doom, and forthwith went away
With my two Children, forth along went I,
And love, which always bears me company.

But when I did of thy late marriage hear,
Where Hymens Torches burnt bright and clear ;
And that new musick, with new mairiage songs
Proclaim'd your wedding, and thy unkind wrongs ;
I fear'd, and yet could not the news beleve,
yet a sad coldness to my breast did cleave.

But when I heard them to Hymen cry,
The more they cry'd, more was my misery.

My servants wept, and yet they hid their tears,
To bring this sad news to me each one fears.

And I do wish I had not known it still,
But yet my mind did prophetic some ill.

When my young Son, desirous far to see
Some novelty, as children use to be,

Standing at the door, did begin to cry,
Come Mother, see my Father passing by :

My father Iasas, who in pomp doth ride
In a Chariot, with his new married Bride ;

Then I did beat my breast, my clothes I rent,
To tear my cheeks, my finge is then were bent.

My mind did urge me to revenge my wrong,
And thrust my selfe among the Bridall throng.

And having snatched thy garland from thy head,
My arms about thy middle to have spread.

And took possession of that at that time,
And to the people cry'd aloud, He's mine.

Father rejoice, Colchians now be glad,
 My brothers ghost hath thele internals had,
 For now I am forlaken, left, and crost,
 My country, Houlc, and kingdome I have lost:
 Nay, I have lost my Husband too, and he
 Was a kingdome of contentment unto me.
 I that both Dragons, and wild Bulls could tame,
 Yet by one man am conquered again.
 I that could quench hot ire with learned charmes,
 Can't quench the ire of love which my breast warmes
 My charmes and Art, and Potions do deceiye me
 And Medea witcheraiis, cannot now deceiye me.
 Me thinks that I do hate the dayes for light,
 And sorrow makes me dysawake all night,
 And feldome is my miserabile brest
 With any quiet gentle sleep refresh.
 I made the Dragon fast, ~~asleep so fall~~,
 But Art hath on my self no power at all,
 A whore embraces him, whom I preferre d,
 She reaps the fruit of ~~her~~ ^{her} which I deery d,
 And perhaps, whil'st thou striv it to please the eare
 Of thy Bride, who thy boalting talcs ~~goffe~~ here,
 With admiration, thou doft then disgrace,
 Either my behaviour, or humely face,
 While out of foolish pride she laughs at me,
 And doth rejoice at my deformity
 Let her laugh and jyc down upon her quik,
 She shall weep, when she hath thy Roger tick.
Medea will by iword, or poylon ~~be~~ ^{be} revenged on her hated enemy.
 But if unto my prayers thou would'st attend,
 Unto entreaties I would now desched.
 I will a suppliant become to thee,
 Even at thy feet, as thou haft been to me.

If thou wilt not pity me, for my own sake,
 Yet on my children some compassion take,
 Their step-mother will most unkindly use them,
 Nay, and perhaps most cruelly abuse them.
 For they too much, alas, resemble thee,
 In them thy living picture I can see.
 And since they are of thee a living Type,
 When I behold them, I am weeping ripe.
 I intreat thee by the gods and the Sun
 My Uncle, and by that which I have done !
 For thy sake, and by my two Children dear,
 Which the pledges of our true affection were ;
 Return to my bed, who left all for thee,
 Be constant as thou didst promise to me.
 Against fierce Bulls thy aid I do not seek,
 Or to charm the watchfull Dragon fast asleep.
 Thee I desire, whom I deserved have,
 By Children had by thee, thee I do crave.
 If thou desir'st a Dowry, I did yeild
 A Dowry which was told out in the field,
 Which I did make thee plough, while thou didst stay,
 Only to bear the Golden Fleece away.
 My Dowry was the Golden Ram, which had
 This Golden Fleece, and was so richly clad.
 This was my Dowry, and should I aske thee
 To restore it back, thou wouldst deny it me.
 My Dowry was the preserving thy selfe,
 Can Greens Daughter bring thee so much wealth ?
 That thou doft live and haft another Bride,
 It was my gift, else thou hadst surely dy'd
 And it was I, that gave thee life to be
 Thus thanklesse, and ungrateful unto me.
 I will revenge-- yet what doth it pertain
 Unto revenge, if I my wrath proclaim ?

And tell what punishments on you shall light?
"The closest anger doth most deadly strike.
I will follow as my rage doth lead me on.
Though I repent the act when it is done.
For I repent that I should e're preservye
A man, that doth so ill of me deservye.
The winged God hath seen from the blye skie
My wrongs, my sorrows, and my injury.
And with a rage he hath inspir'd my heart
To plot, and act e're long some Tragick part.

The Argument of the thirteenth Epistle.

Patroclus the Sonne of Iphicles sayling, as Rumor reports with forty ships to Troy, was shot up with the rest of the Grecians in into a Haven of Boeolia, which when his Wife Leda the Daunger of Acastus and Laodamas understand, the dearly loving her Husband, and being troubled much with dreams writ this Epistle unto him: and admonished him to remember the Oracle, and abstain from the WATTS.

warres. For the Oracle had given this answer to the Grecians, that he shousd perish, that first wear a shield and set foot upon this Trojan ground: But courageous Protesilaus was the first that landed and was slain by Hector.

LAODAMIA to PROTESILAUS.

Laodamia doth to thee send health,
Withing that she might come to thee her self.
I hear that thou in Aulis art wind-bound,
Would I had of the winds such favour found,
To resist thy going hence, and hinder it,
Then for the Sea to grow rough it was fit.
Then I had kill'd thee oftener, and at large
Had spoken more and given thee thy charge.
But when the wind stood fair, thou couldst not stay,
For it did drive thy swelling sails away.
Thy Mariners had what they did require,
It was not I, that did this wind desire,
The wind that for the Mariners stood fair,
Stood croesse for thee, and I, that lovers were.
And me from Protesilaus did divide
while we were both in sweet embraces ty'd.
My broken words short of my meaning fell,
I scarce had time to speak this word, farewell.
For the North wind thy hollowy sailes did stretch,
And from me did Protesilaus fetch.
I lookt as long as I thy ship could see,
And I did send a long look after thee.
When thou wert out of sight, yet I could see
Thy ship, and to behold it pleased me:
But when both died, and thy swift sailing ship,
Out of my sight did both together slip.
A sudden darke ness in my eyes I found,
And presently I fell down in a swound.

So that my mother and old Acastus too,
Although much diligence they both did show,
Could fetch me back to life, although at last,
Cold water they into my face did cast.
Their needless love was thus express'd, but I
Am sorry that they did not let me dye:
For when my sensles did return again,
My love returned too with a new flame;
And chaste affection could not spare my breast;
Those who do love, must never hope to rest.
Now I took no delight to dress my hair,
Nor to wear rich apparel took I care.
And as those women Bacchus hath inspir'd
With a touch of his Viny staffe, and fir'd
Their bosomes, that they run now here, now there;
Such did I in my furious rage appear,
The talkin wives of Phylace did come
To comfort me, and thus their speech began:
Ladanis courage take, put on
Such royal robes as may your birth become.
Alas! shall I in purple robes delight,
While that my Husband at Troy's wall doth fight?
Shall I my hair in curious manner dredge,
While a weighty Helmer doth his hair preffe?
Shall I in new apparel gay appear,
While my Lord doth a Coat of Armeur wear?
While thou art at the wars, like one forlorne
In carelesse habit I at home will mourn.
O Paris, thou that wast born to destroy
With thy fresh beauty the old City Troy.
As thou wert a wonton guest, mayst thou be
A coward, and a milk sop enemy.
Would Helen had not unto thee seem'd
So fair, nor she thy beauty so esteem'd.

O Menelaus, thou with earnest strife
 Dost labour to regain again thy wife.
 Woe's me, I fear thy sad revenge will make
 Many eyes weep, and many hearts to ake.
 The gods from all ill fortune us defend,
 That my returning Husband may commend
 His arms to Jupiter: but when I muse
 Or think upon the wars, I cannot chuse
 But weep, and down my cheeks the tears do run,
 Like snow when it is scatred by the Sun.
 When of Ilium or Tenedos I hear,
 Those names do put me in a sudden fear.
 When of Sinon and Xanthus I have heard,
 Or Ida, these strange names makes me afeard;
 Nor had Paris Role Helen, if at length
 He meant to resigne her, he knew his strength,
 For she did come in royal robes of Gold,
 Adorn'd with Jewels, glorious to behold.
 And with a warlike fleet to Troy she came,
 The Trojans shew'd their great strength by her train.
 And as Helen was fetched by this Fleet,
 So I fear it should with the Grecians meet.
 There is one Hector of whom I do hear,
 A valiant man, and him I greatly fear.
 For Paris said that Hector should affright
 the Grecians, and begin the bloody fight.
 If I be she whom thou dost love most dear,
 Take heed of Hector, him I onely fear.
 His name doth fill my thought with much unrest,
 And is engrav'd upon my troubled breast.
 And as thou shunnest him, so also shun
 Others, for many Hectors thither come.
 And as oft as thou dost prepare to fight,
 Say to thy selfe these words which I do write:

Laodamia

Lassans charg'd me care to take,
 And keep my sc sc from danger for her sake.
 If the Grecians raise Troy unto the ground,
 May'st thou come from the siege with ne're a wound.
 Let Menelaus with the Trojans fight,
 And take from Paris Helena, his right.
 And when he chargeth on the enemy,
 Let his good cause give him the victory
 It behov'd Menelaus with stout blows
 To fetch his wife from the insulting foes;
 But thy case unto his is far unlike,
 And therefore I do wish thee so to fight,
 That when the wars are done thou mayst return,
 And in my loving bosom lie full warm.
 You Trojans I intreat you to spare one
 Of all those enemies against you come;
 For every drop of b'ood that doth proceed
 From his veins, from my veins doth also bleed.
Proteus no strong blows can strike
 With his drawn sword, nor stand the Push of Pike;
 Let Menelaus fight, whom rage doth move,
 Let others fight, let Proteus love.
 For I must needs confess I had a mind
 To have call'd him back, but no strength could find,
 For my tongue stop'd, before the words were spoken,
 And my speech broke off, which was but a bad token.
 And at the threshold of thy fathers gate
 Thy foot did stumble, and did trip thereat,
 Which hath been always counted for a signe,
 Whereby we may of some ill luck divine.
 Which when I did behold I was afraid,
 And thus unto my selfe in secret said:
 I hope the stumbling of his foot shall be,
 A signe, my Husband shall return to me.

These

These things unto thee I do now relate,
That I thy courage may thereby abate.
And I do wish, that I at last may find,
The fears are vain, which now no left my mind.
Besides the Oracles say, he who shall
Land first upon the Trojan ground, shall fail
First by the sword unhappy sure is he,
That by the wars shall the first widow be.
Heaven defend thee, that thou may'st not shew
Thy valour, lest thy valour I do rue.
Let thy ship be the last to shore doth stand,
Let thy ship be the last doth come to land.
Of all that goes on shore be thou the last,
Unto thy Fathers land thou doft not haft.
But when thou commest back, then do not fail
To use thy Oars, and clap on all thy sail.
Then make thou haft to come out of thy ship,
And on the welcome shore most nimblly skip.
When Phæbus lyeth hid or shinceth most bright,
I think upon thee both by day and night.
yet more on thee by night than day, for night
Is the sweet time, that yeildeth Maid's delight.
For then they lye within their Sweet-hearts arm,
Who with their close embraces keep them warm;
While in my widows bed I lye at pleasure,
Wanting true joy, I think on former leasure.
And then a dream doth yeld me some delight,
Sometimes again my dreams do me affright.
Me-thinks I see thee with a visage pale,
Telling to me a sad and mournful tale.
Then waking out of my black dream, I rise,
And for thy safety offer sacrifice
With Frankincense, which I with tears bedew,
So that in burning, it doth brighter shew.

As when we pour oyle to a dying flame,
It doth begin to rise, and blaze again.
O when will that most happy season come?
That I shall embrace thee at coming home,
With such a sweet excessse of joy, till I
Languish with pleasure, and embrasing dyt.
When wilt thou tell me, when we are a bed,
How many thou in war haft conquered?
And in the midd'lst of thy sweet story leave,
To kisse me, and a kisse from me receive;
While that a kisse is the full point to stay
Thy speech, refreshed by this sweet delay.
But when I think of Troy, the seas and wind,
Then fear doth drive all hope out of my mind:
And I do fear, because thy ships are flag'd
By winds, as if to slay thee they assay'd
Who will sayl with crosse wind to his own land?
Thou from thy Country sail'st, when winds withstand;
Neptune will not permit you for to come
Unto his City, and therefore come home.
Spare going (Grecians) the winds do sorbid,
And some divine power in the wind is hid,
By these warres you seek only to regain
An adulteresse, O turn your ships again.
But why should I recall thee back thus now
Let calm winds smooth again the Seas rough brow
I envy now the Trojan Dames, who shall
With grief behold their husbands funeral.
On her husbands head the new married Bride
Shall put a Helmet, and when she bath ty'd
His armour close unto him, and doth mak
Him ready, she a kisse from him shall take:
Such dutifull imployment is a blisse,
Her service is rewarded with a kisse.

And

And being arm'd comp' early, then at large
 She may give to him a most lossing charge :
 Charging him as he tendreth her love,
 To return, and offer his arms to: you.
 And he obeying her command will be
 Care'ull to fight abroad more warily.
 And when he cometh home, she will unlace
 His helmet, and him in her arms imbrace.
 To me in absence, fear doth sorrow bring,
 And I conceive the worst of every thing.
 yet while that thou unto the war art gone,
 I have thy Picture made in wax at home.
 And fondly unto it I often talk,
 And do embracie it, as by it I walk.
 Thy shape in it so lively doth appear,
 Could it speak, it Protegens were.
 On it I look, and often it behold,
 And for thy sake do in my arms enfold ;
 And to thy Picture often I complain,
 As if thy Picture could reply again.
 By thee in whom my Soul alone delights,
 By our tr'e love, and equal marriage rites ;
 And by thy life which I do wish you may
 Bring back, although thy hair be turn'd gray ?
 I vow it thou pleasest to send to me,
 I will obey, and straight way come to thee,
 For whether thou dost chance to live or die,
 In life or death I'll bear thee company.
 Of my Letter this shall the conclusion be,
 Take care of thy self if thou car'st for me.

The Argument of the fourteenth Epistle.

D^{ea}mus the Sonne of Ileas, had by severall Wives fifty Daughters unto whom his brother Aggnes desired to marry his fifty Sonnes, but D^{ea}mus having been informed by the Oracle, that he should dye by the hands of a Sonne in Law, to avoid that danger he takes ship, and fayles to arriue, Aggnes being angry because he had despised his offer, sent his Sonnes with an Army to besiege him charging charging them not to return, until they had slain Damus, or his right-hand Dauphin. He sent them his daughters to keep his Daughters, where with the sword which their father had given them, according to his command, at night when the young men warm'd with wine and jollity were fallen fast asleep, every one killed her husband, except Hypermnestra only, who out of Compassion spreiand preserved her husband Linus, whom Eusebius call'd Linus advising him to return to his father Agrippus and discovered the conspiracy. But her Father Damus perceiving that all his Daughters had executed his will with bloody obedience, excepting Hypernestra, he commanded her to be kept in Prison. Whereupon in the Epistle shee entreats her Uncle and Husband Linus, whom shee had preferred, either to help her, and free her from her Captivity, or if shee dye to see her honorably buried. But at last Linus killed Damus and set her at liberty.

Ovid's Epistles

HYPERMESTRA to LINUS.

Hypernestra sends to thee who dost remain
Of many brothers by their own Wives slain,
I for thy sake am in close prison pent,
And for saving thee do endure punishment.
I am guilty because I did spare thy blood,
" A prosperous wickednesse is counted good,
yet I repent not, since that I had rather Keep my father from blood, than please my father.
Though my father in that sacred fire may,
Burn me, which we toucht on our wedding day,
Or with thos' Torches he may burn my face,
Whch on our wedding-day did brightly blaze.
Or although he doe kill me with that sword
Because to kill thee I could not afford.
He slighted not to make me say, that I repented
Of a good work, it is not my intent
I am gley'd for my fathers cruel fact,
" For sad repentance follows bad act.

11

The sad remembrance of that bloody night,
Makes my heart and hand tremble while I write.
My husband could not by my hand have dy'd
Which shakes; while I this murder would describe,
yet I will try, it was about twilight.
Which endeth day, and doth begin the night,
When as we fifty sisters were brought all,
With royal state into the Cast'le hall.
Whereas Egyptius, without dread or fear,
Received us for his Daughters who arriv'd were.
The flaming Tapers thin'd like stars in Heaven,
And sweet incense unto the fire was given.
The common people did on Hymes cry,
But from this fatall marriage he did flee,
And Jane did from her own City run,
Fair Argos that she might this wedding shun,
And now the young mens drunken heads were bound
About with flowers, and with Garlands crown'd.
The Bridemen with great joy, dreading no danger,
Did bring them to their fatall Bridall chamber,
And laid their heavy bodies on the bed,
On which they were like funeral heates spread
They being now with wine and sleep opprest,
And all the City quiet and at rest,
Me thought the groans of dying men I heard,
And so it was whereat I grew astred
So that my warm bloud and my colour fled,
And left my body cold upon the bed,
As soft and gentle western wines do make
The Cor' to move and A'sp'se leaves to shake
So I trembled, whiles thou laidst at that time
Entranc'd with drinking sleep-prouring wine.
Thinking to obey my fathers sad command
I sat up, and took the sword in my hand;

The truth I speake, thsee times I raiſd the ſword
 To ſtrike, and yet the firſt my hand abhor'd
 My father's command, and my courage whet
 So that his ſword, upon thy throat I leſt,
 But fear and love would, neither me proceed
 My chaſte hand would doo aught that tragick deed.
 Then off my hair I ſore the baren weath'r
 And softly thus did ſayng with thy ſale:—
Hypermnestra, thou haſt a cruell father,
 Therefore obey his command the rather,
 Take courage, and obey thy father's will,
 And boldly with the rest thy Husband kill,
 yet ſince I am a young maid, my hands be Unfit to act a bloody tragedie,
 yet imitate thy ſisters now again:—
 VVho haue by this time a lirir husband's ſtaine,
 yet i' this land ſe muſter could commit,
 To ſtaine it with my own blood if were fit,
 Do they deſerve death, becauſe they pollaffe
 Our faſher's Kingdome, which yet ne rethalcſe,
 Some ſtrangers might from him away haue carried,
 As dowries given them when we were married.
 Though they deſerve death, what ſhall we do leſſe,
 If we commit this deed of wickedneſſe?
 Maids do not love a ſword, or killing tooſl,
 My fingers fitter are to ſpin ſoft woffl,
 Having thus complain'd, my tears began to riſe,
 And dropped on thy body from my eyes.
 And while thy arms aboſt me thou diſt our,
 Thy hand though with the ſword hadſt almoſt put,
 And leſt my father ſhould ſurprize and take thee,
 With theſe words I diſſuddenly awoke thee.
 Rife Lemus who doſt now alone ſurvice,
 Of all thy brethir none are leſt a iye:

Make hast, I say, be ake thy selfe to flie,
Make hast, or else thou wilt be slain to night,
Awak'd from sleep, thou didst amazed stand,
To see the glittering sword shine in my hand ;
And I did wist thee for to fly away,
By night and save thy selfe, while I did flay.
In the morning when Danus came to view
His sons, which his most bloody daughters flew
He saw them laid in deaths eternal number,
Yet one was wanting to make up the number :
And angry, that so little blood was spill'd,
Because I my Husband had not kill'd ;
My father without any love or care,
Drag'd me along even by my saxon hair.
And straight way did command, I should be cast into prison, this was my reward at last.
For Ius still on us doth bend her bryw,
Since I was transform'd into a Cow,
yet punishment enough by her was born,
When Ius did her to a Cow transform.
When she that was so fair could not in height
Of pleasure yield great Jupiter delight,
On the bank of the River Inachus now,
She stood, cloth'd in the shape of a white Cow,
While in her fathers stream both cleat and cold,
The shadow of her horns she did behold ;
And low'd aloud, when she to speak assai'd.
Her shape and voice did make her both afraid
Why dost thou fly from thy own selfe alas,
Or admire thy shape in that watry glasse ?
Thus she that was great Iupiter's chief Lasse,
Is enforce d to feed on dry leaues and grass,
Thou drinck' st spring-water, and art in amaze
When on thy shadow thou dost look and gaze.

And of those spreading horns which thou dost bear
 Upon thy head, thou seem'st to stand in fear
 And the whole beauty Jupiter did wound,
 Now lyeth every night on the bare ground,
 O're hills and rivets thou abroad dost stray,
 O're seas and countries thou dost find thy way.
 And yet O I thou canst not escape,
 Or changing places, change thy outward shape.
 Thy selfe doth always bear thee company ;
 Where Nilus seven streams to the sea run,
 There she unto her former shape did come
 But why should I such ancient tales relate ;
 I have cause to complain of my own fate.
 My Father and my Uncle do wage war,
 And we out of our kingdom banish'd are ;
 And he our royal Scepter now doth sway,
 While miserable we like pilgrims stray :
 Of fifty brethren thou alone art left,
 For their deaths, and my sisters I have wept.
 My sisters and my brothers both slain were,
 For whose sakes, I can't chuse but shed a tear.
 And because thou in safety dost survive
 To be tormented I am kept alive.
 What punishment shall they expect that be Guilty ; when they for goodness condemn me
 And I must die, because I would not spill
 My brothers blood, and cruelly him kill.
 If therefore thou respectest me thy wife.
 Or lovest me, because I sav'd thy life ;
 Help me, or if I die, I thee desire,
 To lay my body on the funeral fire.
 Embalm my banes with thy moist tears, and then
 See that thou carefully do bury them.

And

And let this Epitaph be engraved on My Sepulcher, or on my Marble-stone,
"Hypatia here underneath doth lye,
That was ill rewarded for her piety.
"For she most like unto a faithful wife,
Did lose her own to save her husbands life.
My trembling hand is tired with the weight
Of Chaines, or else I would more largely write.

The Argument of the fifteenth Epistle.

Paris, otherwise called Alexander, styling to Lacedæmon to fetch Helen, which Venus had promised him, was honourably received by Menelaus, but Menelaus and Moses kindred going to Greece, to divide Aeneas his wealth, left Paris at home, charging his wife to use him with as much respect as himself. But Paris improving the opportunity, began to woo and court Helen to gain her love. In this this Epistle he artificially discovers his affection, and with amorous boasting endeavours to infuse into her affection. And because he knew that women love to hear their birth and beauty praised, Paris endeavours by flattery to gain her favour, urging her praises, and striving to disgrace her husband. And at last persuades her to go with him to Troy where he would keep her by force.

PARIS to HELENA.

Paris sweet Helen, wifeth health to thee,
 That health which you can onely give to me.
 Shall I speak, or need no: I my flame reveale?
 You know I love you, nor can I conceal
 My love which I could wish might hidden be,
 Till time did give the opportunity,
 Without all fear most fideley to discover,
 My selfe to be your faithful constan^t Lover.
 But yet who can the fire of love conceale?
 Which by its own light doth it selfe reveal,
 yet if thou lookest that I my grief should name,
 Then know I love thee, these lines shew my flame.
 And I intreat you to have pity on me,
 Because my present sufferings proceed from thee.
 With a frowning countenance read not the rest,
 But such as may become thy beauty best.
 Thy receipt of my Letters joyeth me,
 And cherish hope that I at last shall be
 Receiv'd into thy favour which I wish,
 That Venus may her promise keep in this,
 For Loves fair Mother first perswaded me,
 To take this journey, in hope to gain thee;
 And lest thou shouldest through ignorance offend,
 By divine appointment I came to this end.
 Venus perswaded me to undertake
 This journey, which sh^t would propitious make.

For

For sinice that Venus promis'd me, that you
Should be my wife, I challenge it as due,
For her persuasions made me to take ship
From Troy, and unto Lacedemon ship.

And she did make the wind most fair to stand,
She that's sprung from the sea might it command
And as she smooth'd the sea, and ca'm'd the wind,
So may she make thy breast most soft and kind.
I did not find love here, I broug' t the flame,
VVith me, and to obtain thy love I came,
By wandering storms I was not hither drove
My ship was guided hither by true love.
Nor came I hither like a merchant man,
I have wealth enough, the gods it maintain,
Nor yet the Grecian Cities here to view,
For richer in my kingdom I can shew.

"Tis thee I asks, "Tis thee I onely crave,
VVhom Venus promis'd me that I should have.
I askt thee of her when I did not know the',
She promis'd that she would on me bestow thee,
For of thy beauty I had heard by fame,
Before mine eye had e're beheld the same,
yet 'tis no wonder, if that Cupids Bow,
VVith feathered arrows makes me cry Ame:
Since by unchanged fates it's so ordain'd,
Then do not thou their hidden will withstand.
And that you may beleeve it is my fate,
Receive the truth, which I will here relate.
When that my mother was with child,
And daily did expect delivery,
She dreamt, for in her dream it so did seem,
That of a fire-brand she had deliver'd been.
She rises, and to Priam doth unfold
Her dream, which he unto his Prophets told.

Who

Who straight foretold that Paris should destroy,
 And like a kindled brand set fire on Troy.
 But I do think they rather might divine,
 That brand did signifie this love of mine.
 And though I like a Shepherds son was bred,
 My shape, and spirit soon discovered
 That I had not been born the son of earth,
 But that I claim'd Nobility by birth.
 In the Troy valleys there's a place,
 Which many trees with a cold shade do grace.
 Wherein no Sheep do feed nor any Ox.
 Nor Goats, that love to climb upon high Rocks,
 Here looking towards Troy, and to the Sea,
 I stood and lean'd my selfe against a tree.
 The truth I tell, me thought the earth then shook,
 As if oppressed with some heavy foot,
 And presently swift Mercury from the skies,
 Descended down and stood before mine eies,
 And therefore what I saw I may unfold,
 The God had in his hand a rod of Gold.
 And three goddesses, Venus, Isis, Pallas,
 Did set their tender feet upon the grassie
 Th: a cold amazement stiñned my long hair,
 But winged Mercure bid me not to fear.
 "Thou art, says he, chosen to judge and end
 "The matter, 'twixt these goddesses, who contend
 "About their beauty, say they, which shall be "Accounted the most beautiful of three
 This message I from Jupiter do bring,
 VVhich having said, he from the earth did spring,
 And through the air did a quick passage make,
 And by his words I did more courrge take.
 So that my mind more fortified grew,
 And dreadlesse I each one of them did view,

VVho

Who unto me so beautifull did appear,
I could not judge which of them fairest were,
yet one of them my fancy did approve,
Her beauty shew'd she was the Queen of Love,
But they con'ending which should fairest be,
Did all with most ierb gifts solicite me.

Juno did fairly promise I should be,
A mighty Monarch, Padus promis'd me
Learning so that a doubt did now arise,
Whether I would chuse to be great or wise,
But Venus smiling then, Paris, says she,
Those gifts of theirs but glorious troubles be
I'lle give thee Hebea thou shalt hereafter
In thy arms imbrace Leada's fair daughter.
Thus both her gift, and beauty conquer'd me,
So that to her I gave the victory.

And ait:ward my fate so kind was grown,
That now to be the Kings son I was known,
At my instalment all the Courts did joy,
Kept in a yearly festival in Troy
And as I lov'd I was belov'd of many,
But for thy sake I would not match with any.
Kings and Dukes daughters did of me approve,
And fairest Nymphs with me did fall in love,
yet all of them were but despis'd of me,
After I had this hope of marrying thee.

Day and night in my mind I thee did keep,
And thinking on thee I should fall all. ep
How comely would thy presence sure have been
Whose beauty wounded me a though unseen;
I was enflamed with a strange desire,
Burning when I was absent from the fire.
My hopes I could no longer now contain,
But to see put forth, my wish to obtain;

And

And now the losty Phrygian Pines I fell'd,
And trees for building ships most fitting held.
The woods of Garganu, and Ida did yield,
Great store of trees, wherewith I ships did build.
I built their decks, and lined the ships side,
With planks of Oak, which might a storm abide ;
And did rig, and tackle them beside.
With ropes, and sayles which to the yards were ty'd,
And I did set on the stern of the ship,
The Image of those Gods which did it keep,
And on my own ship I did make them paint
Venus and Capit that it might not want
Her safe protection, who had promis'd me,
By her assistance I should marry thee.
Soon as my fleet was builded thus and fram'd,
To sea I presently resolv'd to stand.
My father and Mother, when I did require
Their leave to go, would not grant my desire,
Or licence me, and therefore to have staid
My intended journey, both of them affai'd.
My Sister Cassandra with loosed hair,
When as my Ships even weighing anchor were,
Said, whither goest thou ; thou shalt bring again,
By crossing the seas, a destroying flame
The truth she said ; for I have found a fire,
Love hath enflam'd my soft breast with desire,
A fair wind from the Port my sails did drive,
And I in Helena Countrey did arrive,
Where thy Husband did me much kindnessesse show :
And sure the gods decreed it shoud be so. g
He shew'd me all that worthy was of fight
In Lacedemon to breed me delight.
But there was nothing that my fancy took,
But onely thee and thy sweet beauteous look :

For

For when I saw thee I was even amaz'd.
My heart was wounded while on thee I gaz'd,
For I remember Venus was like thee,
When she would have her beauty judg'd by me.
And if thou hadst contended with her, I
Had surely given thee the victory.
For the report of thee abroad was blown;
Thy beauty was in every Country known.
For through all Nations where the Sun doth rise,
Thy beauty only bear away the prize.
Believe me, fame did not report so much
As thou deserv'st, thy beauty seemeth such,
That Zeus did not thy love disdain,
And to steal thee away did think't no shame!
When surring to the Latae manus fashion,
Thou didst sport with the young men of thy Nation,
In stealing thee I like his just desire,
But how he could restore thee I admire.
For such a beauteous prey had sure deserv'd,
To have been kept and constantly preserv'd,
For before thou shouldst been took from my bed.
Before I would loose thee, I would loose my head;
Alas, could I have e'er so forgott thee,
Or while I liv'd have let thee been took from me?
Yet if I must restore thee needs at last,
I would have ye presum'd to touch, and take
The golden apples of thy Virgin tree?
And n't send thee back with Virginity,
Or if that I had spar'd thy Virgin treasures
I would have ritterd some other pleasures.
Then grant thy love to Pegasus, who will be,
While I live most constant unto thee.
I will be constant to your own desire,
My love and life shall both at once expire.

Before

Before great kingdoms I preserved thee,
Which royall ~~Jove~~ promis'd unto me.
And learning, Pallas gift, I did refuse,
And to enjoy thy sweet selfe I did chuse.
When Luna, Venus, and faire Pallas too,
Their naked bodies unto me did shew,
And in the Ideas valleyes did not grudge,
In case of beauty to make me their Judge,
yet I do not repent of my election,
My mind is constant to my first affection.
I beseech thee let not my hope prove vain,
Who spar'd no labour in hope thee to gain,
Beneath your selfe you need not to decline,
your birth is noble, so is also mine,
So that if we do match, you cannot fail
Beneath your birth, or be disgrac'd at all.
For if you search into my pedigree,
Iove and Alethea are of kin to me,
And my father Priam doth the Scepter sway,
Of the great'ſt kingdom in all Aſia.
Many Cities and faire Houses thou shalt see,
And Temples ſuiting the gods Majestic.
Thou shalt ſee Troy, with Towers encompass'd round,
Whose walls Apollo Harpeſt first did found.
Befides there are ſuch ſtore of people there,
The Land the people cannot hardly bear,
Great troops of Trojans, Matrons thou shalt meet
And ſtore of Trojans wives in every street.
The poverty of Greece thou wilt then pity,
When thou ſeest one house as rich as a City,
yet Sparta I cannot contemn with scorn,
Because thou in that happy Land wert born.
But Sparta is poor, and cannot afford thee
Dreffings, which with thy beauty may agree.

The

That face of thine ought not to be content
 With some common, but a curious ornement,
 And it is fit, thou shouldest the old say by,
 And every day wear some fresh rarity,
 When the habit of the Trojans you do see,
 You may think women's habies ticher be.
 Then Hele- grant me love not didatia,
 A Trojan, who thy favour would obtain,
 He was a Trojan from outblood descended,
 Who with this Heavenly office was befriended.
 To fill Five Cup, and with water allay
 The strength of his Nectar and Ambrozie,
 A Trojan in Aurora took delight,
 Who doth begin the day, conclude the night.
 Anchises was descended to from Troy,
 Whom the Queen of Love desired to enjoy,
 And did descend in the Idas Valley,
 In amorous ways to sport with him and dally.
 I am a Trojan too, and if in truth,
 You should compare my beauty and my youth
 With Menelaus; I suppose that he,
 Should not in your choice be prefer'd to me,
 By matching with me; thou shouldest not begin
 To such as bloody Ajax hat' him,
 Who with the flesh of men his Horses fed,
 From which fight the Sun; frighted Horses fled.
 My Grandfather did not his Brother kill,
 As Menelaus Grandfather, who did spill
Myrmidons blood, who being murder'd so,
 He into the Myrrhæan-sea did throw.
 Nor yet our great Grandfather catcheth after,
 (Like unto Tantalus in the Stygian water)
 Apples and water, which are both so nigh
 His lips, and yet from his touch'd lips do flee,
 yet

yet if from them shou' hast descended been,
fou' would me wish to be to shes a kin. I. v. 1. qd. on. v. 1. v. 1.
yet unworthy. Asierans takes delight in thee, and doth enjoy thee every night. v. 1. v. 1. v. 1.
I scarcely can beholde thes at the Table, los I sayd to wome
And there to look on shouldest not aye. v. 1. v. 1. v. 1.
For at that very time I obseue, and find
Many things, that do much offend my mind, v. 1. v. 1. v. 1.
For when the banquet is brought in then I sayd I sayd
Do with my room into my chesey, los I sayd to wome
For it doth grieve me what I do behold, v. 1. v. 1. v. 1.
How with his armes his darb thy neck infold. v. 1. v. 1. v. 1.
And I could blush, when he before my face
Doth thy small waist so clownishly embrace. v. 1. v. 1. v. 1.
And it did break my heart when I did see, v. 1. v. 1. v. 1.
How he would cast his furred gown over thee.
And when that he would give thes kisses sofe,
I put the cup before my eyes full of
His close imborde I did never looke, v. 1. v. 1. v. 1.
For I beheld them with a drowne cast looke.
My meat, as if within thy mouth it grew,
I most unwillingly did seeme to chew.
And I sigh'd often which when thou didst see,
Thou oftentimes wouldst smile, and laugh aye. v. 1. v. 1.
Then I would strive to quench my flame with wine,
But love through drunkelessness most cleare doth shine,
When I look'd away, left I thought should see,
Thy beauty made me look again on thee.
It grieved me to look on my disgrace,
But grieved me more to seee look on thy face,
And I did strive my passion for to hide,
But oh! I desirous of joye in soonest say'd.
I do not flatter thee, thou do st perceive
That I did love thee, nor could I deceipte

Thou

Thou discern'st my love, wherin I with-why-be Known to thy selfe alone, and none but thee.
 When tears did spring, I turnd awry my head,
 Left Menelaus shold aske why I them fled.
 How oft have I told fained tales of love?
 Hoping I might thereby your favour move,
 Under a fained name hoping to move you,
 But it was I indeed did truly love you.
 And that I might my mind more freely speake,
 A wanton drunkeenesse I would counterfeit
 I remember once thy bosom open lay,
 And to my view thy white breasts did betray,
 Thy fair breasts which were far more white in shew,
 Than purest milk, or the new fallen Snow,
 Or whiter than that Swans fair downy feather,
 When Jupiter and Leda lay together.
 When I beheld them, I was so smot'ned,
 My Ring fell from my finger at Pygmalion,
 When thou kissed' st thy Daught're, I would not miss
 To take thy kiss off with another kiss.
 And sometimes I some ancient song would sing,
 Of those that heretofore had Lovers been.
 Sometimes by secret signs my love was shewn,
 And by a nod or winkle I made it known.
 Then to Chrysillus and Abibus I did shew,
 My grief, and both of them began to woe.
 Thy waiting maid's who when I had begun
 They both did leave me before I had done.
 And I do wish the gods had been so bent,
 To have made thee prize of a Tournament,
 That he that got the victory might bear thee
 Out of the field, and he that won thee wear thee
 As Hippomimes fair Atalanta won
 Who all her former faintheads had ouer-run.

Thou

LIB. V.

Thou in the Phrygian Cities might be seen,
 Like Hippodamia brought in like a Queen,
 By Peleus, and as stout Achilles' wife
 Achilus horns for Diomedes' fate;
 So by some valiant adventure, I
 Would win thee by some act of valour,
 But now I can but beg of thy sweet beauty,
 And at thy feet prostrate my self in duty,
 O thou that art thy brothers' only glory,
 To whom even Jove himself could not be sorry,
 To be a husband, if so be you were,
 Not by birth descended from Jove,
 Either I will return to Troy with thee,
 Or here in thy Lacedaemon be.
 Loves arrow hath so wounded my left breast,
 That it unto the very bone hath pierc'd.
 My sister truly prophete of me,
 That with loves arrow I should wounded be.
 Then since (sweet Helen) it is ordain'd by fate,
 That I should love thee, pity my estate,
 Do not contemn my love, but my lusty heart,
 So may the gods attend unto my prayer.
 If thou wilt let me lie with thee to night,
 More I could say that should breed thy delight,
 To wrong thy husband so, art thou affain'd?
 Or that thy marriage bed should be so stain'd?
 O Helen, thou a count'ry con science hast,
 "Dost thou imagine to be fair and chaste,
 Either change thy beauty or more loving be,
 "For beauty is a foe to Chastity.
 Venus doth love Loves, but can fructs to gather,
 And Jup'it'rs horses did make him t' be fat,
 Then how can't thou be chaste, if thou take after Jup'it' and Leda? Thou art their daughter.

May'st thou be chaff when thou to Troy art brought,
And for thy rape may I be held in fault.
Let's not offend, and after mend our life,
When as Venus promised, thou art my wife.
Besides, thy husbands actions do command
The same to thee, who that he might be-friend
His guest, absents himself, to give us leave,
And opportunity to enjoy pleasure.

To go to Crete he thought it time most fit,
O he's a Man of a honourable wit;
Which at his departure was well expressit,
When he bid thee use well his Trojan guest,
Thy absent husbands will thou dost neglect,
Thou tak'st no care of me, nor me affect,
Being so senselesse, thinkest thou that he
Can prize thy beauty or else value thee?
He cannot, for if he had known the danger,
He had not bid thee be kind to a stranger,
Although my words nor love cannot move thee,
Let us improve this opportunity.

Then thy husband our selves shall shew more folly,
If we loose time through baillfull melancholly,
To be thy paramour he offer'd me,
Make use then of his weak simplicity,
For thou dost eye alone, and so do I,
I were better if we did together lye,
Let us enjoy our selves, for I do say,
Midnights sport yeilds more pleasure than the day,
Then thou shalt have faire promises of me,
And I will bind my selfe to marry thee,
For I do vow, if that thou canst beleive me,
For one nights lodging; i.e. a Kingdome givc thee:
And if thou canst but to beleiving be,
Unto my Kingdome thou shalt go with me.

That

That thou followed'st me it shall not be thought,

For I alone will bear the blame, and fault,

As Theses did, my actions shall be such,

And his example may thee neatly touch.

For Theses did carry thee away,

Cæsar and Pollax so did also stray,

And I will be the fourth my love's as ample,

To thee, and I will follow their example.

My Trojan Fleet for thee doth ready lay,

And when you please, we soon may sail awsy;

Thou in Troy City shalt live as a Queen,

Ador'd as if thou had'st some goddesse been.

And wheresoever thou dost please to be,

The people shall offer sacrifice to thee,

Thy kindred, and the Trojans shall present

Gifts unto thee, with humble complement;

I cannot here describe thy happiness,

Far above that my Letter doth express.

Let not the fear of Wars thy thoughts amaze;

Or that all Greece will straight great forces raise

To fetch thee back; who have tiny scéght again?

Belive me, those fears are but fond, and vaine,

The Thracians Orybis took away,

Yet no wars after trou'ed Thracie.

Jas from Colches brought away Medea,

And yet no wars did wait Thessalia.

Phœbe and Ariadne stollen were

By Theses, yet Miles made no warre.

"Dangers may seem far greater than they are,

"And fear may be without all ground of fear.

Suppose too (if you please) wars should ensue,

yet I by force their forces could subdue.

My Country can to yours yeild equal forces,

For it hath store of men and store of horses.

Nor can your husband ~~merit~~ show
More valiant courage, than Paris can do.
For when I was but a young stripling, In my life
Did rescue our flock from the enemy; ~~and~~ I
VWho did intend to drive any whom al^ly
VWhereon they did me Alexander call.
And of Ilio-tus, and Dryobulus, ~~you~~ did call me
VWhen I was young did get the Story ~~How~~ I
And as in single combat I plaid my part,
So with my bow I could hit any mark.
And I know M^r Leu was not in h^r
A forward youth, nor could he do so much. And I
Besides, Hele r^s my Brother, who may stand
In account of Soldiers, for a whole band.
My strength, and forces are unknown to them,
Nor knowest thou what a husband I shall be.
And therefore, either no war, that I can,
Or Tr^ras forces shall the Eye subdue,
Yet I could be content of such a wife
"To fight: there's credit in a noble strife.
Besides if al^l the world should fight for thee,
Thou shalt bo^rthous to potent y^r ~~and~~ power y^r
Sweet Hele, when consent to go with me,
what I have promis'd shall performed be,

The Argument of the Fourteenth Epistle.

Helen having read Paris his Epistle; in her answer shows at first offended, and chides him, and for modesties sake objects against his persuasions, proving them idle; but so that the richer gives, then takes away encouragement from him to proceed in his suit; she also throwing a woman's crafty wit, according to that of Ovid, in his Art of Love;

Quod; regal; ut jo foliis etenem.
Quod regas illi etiam; quod non regas operas us infor,
In sequitur, &c.

At first perhaps her Letter will be fowre,
And on thy hopes her paper seem to lowre;
In which she will conjure thee to be mote,
And charge thee to forbear thy basell fuit.
Tush, what she most forswore, she most defiles,
In frosty woods are hid the boocell fires.

At last she seems to consent to Paris desire, aduising him as a more safe and honest course, not to write his desire, but impart his mnde to her waiting-maids Clymene and Alcuba, he dealing with them, so farre prevailed, that he brought both Helena and them to Troy.

HELENA'S Answer to PARIS.

Since thy wanton Letter did my eyes infect
When I did read it, why should I neglect
To answer it? Since to answer it can be
No breach of chastity at all in me.
What boldnesse was it in thee, thus to break
All Lawes of hospitality and to speak
Thus by your Letter thereby for to move
My affection and folisite me for love.
Didst thou on purpose faile into our Port?
That thou mightst woe me, and with fair words court,
And had not we power to avold this danger?
And shut our Palace gate against a straunger?
Who dolt require our love with injury?
Didst thou come as a guest, or enemy?
I know my just complaint will fume to thee,
To protecct from rudenesse, and iusticys.

Let

Let me seem rude; so I preserve my fame,
And keep my honour free from spot or stain.
Although my countenance be not sad or fowre,
Though with bent brows I do not sit and lowre;
yet I have kept my clear fame without spot,
No man hath in my Tables found a blot.
So that I wonder whence thy encouragement
Proceedeth, that thou shouldest my love attempt?
Because once *T*hefis stole me as a prey;
Shall I the Second time be stolne away?
It had been my fault had I given consent,
But being stolne against my will I went.
And yet he gathered not my Virgin flower,
He us'd a no violence, though I was in his power;
Some kisses onely he did striving gain,
But no more kindnesse could from me obtain.
Such is thy wantonnesse, this wouldst not be
Like him content alone with killing me.
He brought me back untouched, his modesty
Seem'd to excuse his former injury;
And plainly it appear'd, that the young man
For stealing me grew penitent again.
But *P*aris comes when *T*hefis is fallen off,
That *H*elen may be still the worlds scoffe.
yet with a Lover who can be offend?
If thy love prove true as thou hast pretended?
This I do doubt, although I do not feare,
My beauty can command love any where.
But because women should not soon believe men,
For men with flattering words do oft deceave them.
Though other wives offend, and that a fair one
Is seldom chaste, yet I will be that rare one,
Because thou think my mother did offend,
By her example you think me to bende.

My

My Mother was deceiv'd, Jesus to her came
 In the shape of a milk-white feathered Swan.
 If I offend 'tis not my ignorance,
 For no mistake can shadow my offence.
 And yet her error may be happy thought,
 For to offend with greatness is no fault,
 But I should not be happy, if I erre,
 Since I should not offend with Jupiter.
 Of royal kindred thou dost boast to me,
 But Jove, the fountain of Nobility.
 Nay though from Jupiter thy self doth spring,
 And P. Iupp., and Aress, be to thee a kin,
Jupiter's my Father, who himself did cover
 With a Swan's feathers, and deceiv'd my Mother.
 Go reckon now thy Pedigree of thy Nation,
 And talk of Priam and Laomedon,
 Whom I do reverence, yet thou shalt be
 Remov'd from Jupiter to the sixth degree;
 And I but one; and albeit that Troy
 Be a great, land, such is this we enjoy.
 Though it for wealth, and force of men excell,
 The land is barbourous, where thou do'st dwelle,
 yet thy Letter promises such gifts to me,
 That goddeses might chuse with tempeste be.
 But if I may with modesty thus speak,
 Thy self, and not thy gifts may fancy take.
 For either I'le keep thy integrity,
 Or for thy love, no gifts I'le go with thee.
 Though I despise them not, if e're I take
 Those gifts, it shall be for the givers sake,
 For when thy gifts have no power to me, e're I take
 I do esteem this more that thou do'st love me,
 And that thou shouldest a painfull voyage take
 Through the rough Seas, and all even for thy sake.

And

and I do mark thy carriage at the Table,
Although I to dissemble it amable.
Sometimes thou wak'ly wilt on me glance,
And put me almost out of countenance,
Sometimes shou' figh't and then the cup do' take,
And to drink where I did drink, do' pleasure take,
And so sometimes with thy fingers, or a wink,
Thou closely wou'd it expreſſe what thou didſt think.
And I confeſſe I have bluſh't many times,
For fear my husband ſhould diſcern thy ſigntes.
And oftentimes unto my ſelf I ſaid,
If he were ſhameleſs he would be diſmaid.
And on the Table thou haſt many a time
Fahon'd and drawn forth with a little wine
Thouſe letters, whiſh my name did plainly ſhow,
And underneath them thou haſt wriſt,
I loo'k't on it, but ſeem'd not to beliue what it,
But now this word ~~am~~ doth alſo give me.
By theſe allurments thou my heart might'ſt bend:
If that I would have yeilded to offend.
I muſt confeſſe thou haſt a beauteous face
Might win a Maid to yeild to thy embrac'e.
Let ſome one rat' er beneſtly enioy thee,
Then that a ſtrangers love ſhould ſo deſtroy me.
To reſiſt the power of beauty leaſt by me,
Virtue abſtains from thiſgs which pleaſing be.
By how many young men haue I woo'd been?
That beauty ~~per~~ ſees, others haue ſeen.
Thou art more bold, but they as muſh did ſee,
Nor haſt more courage, but leſs modeſty.
I would thy ſhip had then arrived here,
When a thouſand youths for my love Suicid were.
For before a thouſand I ha'd prefer'd thee,
Nay even my husband muſt haue pardon'd me.

But

But thou haft staid so long, and haft so trifled
 That all my Virgin joyes are gon and rifled.
 Thou wert too slow; therefore suppress thy flame.
 What thou defir'st another doth obtaine.
 Though to have been thy wife I do wish still,
Mercus enjoyes me, not 'gainst my will.
 Cease with fair words to mollify my breast,
 If you love me let it be so exprest.
 Let me live as fortune hath allotted me,
 Do not seek to corrupt my chasteitie.
 But Venus, promis'd thee in the Idean wood,
 When three nak'd goddesses before thee stood:
 One promised a Kingdome unto thee,
 To'other that thou in wars should'st prosperous be.
 But Venus, who was the third in this strife,
 Did promise Helen should be thy wife.
 I scarce believe the goddesses would be
 In a case of beauty judg'd so by thee.
 Were the first true, the latter part is fain'd.
 That she gave thee me, for Judgement obtain'd.
 I do not think my beauty such that she Could think to bribe thy judgement by that fee.
 I am content that men may beauty prize,
 That beauty Venus praises, the envies.
 Ther's no assurance in a strangers love,
 As they do wander, so their love doth rove.
 And when you hope to find most constancy,
 Their love doth coole, and they away do flye.
 Winesse Ariadne and Hippothoe,
 Whole lawleſſe ove procur'd their misery.
 And it is said, thou did'st Omen wrong,
 Forsaking her, whom thou had'st lov'd so long.
 This by thy ſelf cannot denied be,
 For know I took care to enquire of thee.

Besides

Besides if thou had'st a desire to prove Constant in thy affection and true love ;
 yet thou would'st be compell'd at least to fail,
 And with thy Trojans thou away would'st saile.
 For if the wished night appointed were,
 Thou would'st be gone, if that the wind flood fair,
 And when our pleasures grew unto the height,
 Thou would'st be gone, if that the wind flood right :
 So by a fair wind I shou'd be bereft
 Of joyes even in the midst imperfect left.
 Or as thou perswad'st shall I follow thee
 To Troy, and so great Priams Daughter be.
 yet I do not so much contemn swift fame,
 That I would flick disgrace upon thy name.
 What would Priam, and his wife think of me
 With's Daughters, and thy brothers which may be ?
 What might Sparta, and Greece of Heles say ?
 Or what might Troy report, and Alys ?
 And how canst thou hope I should faithfully prove ?
 And not to others, as to thee grant love.
 Is that if a strangers ship do arrive here,
 It will procure me thee a jealous fear.
 And in thy rage call me adulteresse,
 When thou art guilty of my wickednesse.
 Thou that didst cause my fault wilt me upbraid,
 O may I first into my grave be laid ;
 But I shall have Troy wealth, go rich and brave,
 And more then thou canst promise I shall have.
 Tissue, and Cloth of gold they shall present me,
 And store of gold shall for a gift be sent me.
 yet pardon me, those gifts cannot inflame me,
 I know not how thy Land would entertain me,
 If in the Trojan Land I should wrong'd be,
 How could my brother, or father help me ?

Fa'se

False Jason with fair promises beguiled
 Medea, Who afterward exil'd.
 Her Father Eetes was not there, to whom
 When she was scorn'd by Jason, she might come.
 Nor her Mother Iope to whom she Might return, nor her sister Chalciope.
 I fear not this, was not Medea afraid.
 "For thost who mean best, soonest are bestrid,
 Ships in the harbour do in safety ride,
 But are tost at Sea, and do storms abyse.
 And that same fire-brand too affrighteth me,
 Of which thy mother dreme, and thought that she
 Had been deliver'd: and besides too I
 Do fear Cassandra's dismal prophesie,
 Who did foretell, as truth did her inspire,
 The Grecians should wait the City Troy with fire.
 And besides, as faire Venus favours thee,
 Because thy judgment gave her the victory;
 I fear the other goddesses do grudge
 At thee, because thou did it against them judge.
 And I do know that warr may follow after,
 Our fatall love shall be reveng'd with slaughter.
 Yet to allow her praise I am content,
 Why should I question that Which she hath incand
 yet for my howbeliet be not thou griev'd.
 For such good matters hardly are believ'd.
 First I am glad that Hera did regard me,
 Secondly, that with me she did reward thee.
 And that Miller, when you of her beauty heard,
 Was before Paris and Junes gifts prefer'd.
 Am I both Willowy, and Kingam to thee?
 Since thou lov'st me, should I no kindehels shew thee?
 I me not so cruall, yet cannot incline
 To love him, who I fear cannot be mine.

For suppose I to Sea would go with thee,
To seal hence I have no opportunity,
Is love's thef's I am ignorant and rude,
Heavens knows my husband I did ne're delude :
And in a Letter this my mind to shew,
It is task, I before did never do :
They are happy that doise it every day,
To offend it is hard to find the way.
A kind of painfull fear restrains me,
And how they look on us me-thinks I see,
Of the grumbling people I am much afraid.
For Adela told me long since what they said,
But take no notice, nor dost thou delue,
I know you can dilemble if you like,
Then sport and spare not, but let us be wary,
"And if not chaste, let us at least be chary.
For though that Menelaus absent be,
I must discreetly use my liberty.
For though he'll on earnest business gone,
And for this journey had occasion,
I took occasion that my love to shew,
Make ha'nt to seel'd, Sweet heart, if you go.
And he straightway to recompence my wish
Of his return gave me a joyful kiss.
Charging me that my care should be exprest
In looking to his house, and Pray if he's deest.
I smil'd, and to him could shy naughtest at all,
I striv'd, to refrain laughing, With, I shall.
So with a prosperous wind he sail'd to Ceas,
Yet to do, what thou dost list, is not meet.
I'me kept in his absent with guard most strong,
"Do st thou not know the hands of Kings are long?
Besides, thou wrong it us both in praising me,
For when he heares it he will jealous be.

The

The fame of beauty maketh me suspected,
 I would I had the fame of it neglected.
 Though to leave us together he thought fit,
 To his wife he would
 To my own keeping he did me commit
 "He knew there could no better guardian be,
 "To keep me chaste than my own honesty,
 He fear'd my beauty, but my chastity
 Did take away that idle jealousy.
 To make use of time thou advisest me,
 Since his absence giveth opportunity,
 I must confess I have a good mind to it,
 But am yet unresolv'd, and fear to do it,
 Besides you know my husband is from home,
 And you without a wife do lie alone;
 The nights are long, and while we sit together
 In one house, we may talk unto each other.
 And woe is me! when we are both alone,
 I know thou hast a fair alluring tongue,
 Thus every circumstance seems to invite me,
 And nothing but a basfull fear doth fright me,
 Since persuasions do no good, leave that course
 And make me leave this basfull traffic by force.
 Such force would seem a welcome injury,
 And I would fain be thus compell'd by thee,
 yet let me rather my new love restrain,
 A little water quencheth a young flame.
 Did not the stout inhabitants of Thebes
 Fight with the Centaures for Hippodamia
 And durst thou not think Meleager
 And Tyndarus as violent a wrath?
 A though of valour thou do'st boast to me,
 By words and amorous face doth not agree
 Thou art not fit for Mars, nor for the field,
 But for Venus' combats, which do pleasure a yeild.

Let

Let valiant hardy men of wars approve,
But Paris follow thou the wars of love.
See Hebe fight for her, when thou dost praise
The gentle arts of love that give the boys.
And in these wars 'tis wisdom for to fight,
And any Maid that's wise will take delight.
Nor upon idle points of modesty stand,
I may perhaps in time give thee my hand.
But it is your desire, that you and I
Should meet, I know what you do mean thereby.
Thus far this guilty Letter hath reveal'd
A piece of my mind the rest is conceal'd.
By Clymene and Æsira we may further
Make known our minds, more fully to each other.
For these two Maidens in such matters be Companions, and Counsellors to me.

Writing from Paris, 1616. To James Lord

the 21st of June, 1616. From Paris to London
The 21st of June, 1616. To James Lord Buckingham at Whitehall
The 21st of June, 1616. To James Lord Buckingham at Whitehall
The 21st of June, 1616. To James Lord Buckingham at Whitehall
The 21st of June, 1616. To James Lord Buckingham at Whitehall
The 21st of June, 1616. To James Lord Buckingham at Whitehall

The Argument of the seventeenth Epistle.

The Sea of Hellefson being even furions over, and as Pilley who was a fisherman himself, when he was in the same place, did being two opposite Cities, Lander or Lander being deeply in love with Mrs of Saffre, did use to swim by night unto her over the Helle-fson; but being hindered by the tempestuous roughness of the Sea,

And had come within. Not the ~~days~~ ^{hours} may I
 Upon their watchtower, while the Anchor way
 Presently they ~~are~~ ^{have} a dove,
 And discern'd our love, which we seek to hide.
 With this Letter I did write, and so
 Told unto it, happy Letter go,
 This is thy happiness, thou must understand,
 That ~~He~~ shall embrace with his hand,
 And perhaps thou shalt kiss her rosy lips,
 While with her ~~is~~ ^{thou} I seal the open rive.
 Having spoken these words, then my right hand after
 Did write, these words upon this silent Paper,
 But I do will, that my right hand might be
 Not us'd in writing, but to swim to me,
 It is more fit to swim, yeg I can write,
 My mind with ease and happily indee,
 Seven nights are past which seem to me a year,
 Since first the Seas with stormes intaged were.
 These nights seem'd long to me; I could not sleep,
 To think the Sea should stul his roughnesse keep.
 Those Torchies which on thy Tower burning
 I saw, or else I thought that I did see,
 Thrice I put off my cloathes, and did begin
 Three times to make triall if I could drivin,
 But swelling seas did my deesse oppose,
 Whose rising billowes o're my face did followes.
 But ~~Baras~~, who art the Bercer of ~~the~~ ^{the} world,
 Why thus to croake me, do st thou bend thy mind?
 Thou doft not informe against the Seas burme,
 Hadst thou not been in love what wouldest thou do?
 Though thou art told, yet ant thou did improve
 Ovidy, who did warm thy heart with love and on me
 And wouldest have vexed, if with my selfe
 Thy passage had been hindred through me.

When I performede my selfe the like had said,
My passing through the sandy sight, I made
The Moons bright dreams were in the same place
And 'twas as light as day my heauen
No noise nor noise was to my eare, did come,
But the murmur of the water where I lay
Only the A/cres for lvs, & ffeare, & ffeare, & ffeare
Seemed by nightes fliues complaintes to make
But when the Arches of the eyre & the Regne
Vnto the top of the waves, I did leping
But when I saw my Tressa O then mouth
Where that fire blazeth, my fair love doth lyse
For that same shone said I doth her countreyn
Who is my goddesse, my fire, and my flame
These words to my Armes did such strenght entone
Me thought the Sea gret as me then before
The coldnesse of the water, I seeme drowne
For love did burn my smythe heart, full wroth
The ruyer to make on the shone, I fand my selfe
The greater courag and more streght of mind
But when I could by this discern a pe
Thou givid me courage by looking me into the ey
Then to please thee, my Mistris I began
To spread my armes by me, and strongly ffeare
Thy Nereis from leaueing downe and stonye shore
This without flattery, & did also say
And though the dñe wate roun, thou didst come
Down to the shone And so the wavy didst run
And to imbrace and kiss me didst begin
" I he gods to get such fliess, fine wondre ful
And thy own garnementes wouldest get me
Drying my haire which had been wette
What past besides, the Tower, and me on lyne,
And Tercy which through the sea my my didflow.

The joyes of that night we no more can count
 Then drops of water in the Hells spew.
 And because we had so little time for pleasure,
 We us'd our time, and did not wait our leisure,
 But when Asors rose from Tibors bed,
 And the morning star shew'd his glistering head,
 Then we did kill in half, and kill again,
 And that the night was past we did complain.
 When thy Nurse did me of the rime in order,
 Then from thy Tower, I to the shore return.
 With tears we parted, and then I beg n,
 Back through the Hells down again to swim.
 And while I swim, I shou'd look back on thee,
 As far as I could the (weet Here) see.
 And if you will believe me, when I do come
 Hither unto thee, then methoughts I swim,
 But when from thee again I return'd back,
 I seem'd like one that had suffer'd ship wrack.
 To my home I went unwillingly again,
 My City 'gainst my will doth me constrain.
 Alas ! why should we be by seas disjoin'd,
 Since that love hath united us in mind.
 Since we bear such affection to each other,
 Why should not we in one land dwell together?
 In Sethos, or Asors dwell with me,
 Thy countrey pleasance, as mine doth thee.
 Why should the tough seas thus perplex our minds?
 Why should we be parted by cruel winds?
 The Dolphins with our love acquainted grow,
 The fish by often swimming doth me know.
 And through the water I have worn a path,
 Like to those wheel-ruts which a hasty way hath,
 I complain that I so much shifts was put,
 But now the winds that passage have up stur.

The Helle-pon^t is rough, the waves go high,
 So that shipp scarce in Harbour late do lye.
 And I believe the sea her name first found,
 From the Virgin Hell, who was in't drown'd.
 This sea shall by her death intombe,
 Her name do shew her guilt, though late (pare me)
 I envy Jason, who did saile to Grece,
 And fetch away from thence the golden Fleece.
 In his ship call'd the Ram, yet I desire
 No ship of his, this is all I require,
 That the waters of the Helle-pon^t would be
 So gentle to permit me swyn to thence,
 I want no art to swyn, give leave to me,
 And both the ship and Pilot I will be,
 I will not sail by the great or lesser beare,
 For by such common stars love cannot leave,
 Let others on Andromedes star look,
 Or triadnes Crown to Heaven took,
 Nor yet Califfes stars which do shone c ear,
 In the Polar Circle, which they call the Nere,
 These stars whic by the gods were stellish'd,
 In my doubtfull passage shall not be my guide,
 But I have a more brighter star than thele,
 My love wil guid me through the darkest seas,
 Oft when my arms g^t wry'd with weariness,
 That they cannot cut their wa yes through the le^{is},
 When I do tell them, that to quit their pain,
 They shoul^d imbrace me, they would then again,
 To enjoy their prize, with such a fresh strength I wim,
 Like a swift Horse that doth to run begin,
 Thou art my star and I will folow thee,
 Rather then all those stars in Heaven be,
 Thou, thou art far more worthy for to thine,
 A star in Heaven, yet stay on earth thy time,

Or if thou wilt needs go, then leu to me
The way to Heaven, that I may follow thee,
Thou art here yet I the way to thee can't find,
The roughness of the seas perplex my mind.
Whst though the Ocean do gart us two part?
This narrow Sea keeps me from thee sweet-heart,
If I should in some distant Country be,
It would cut off all hope of seeing thee.
But now I am infirm'd with more desire,
And burn the more the nearer to the fire,
And though the thing I wish for absent be,
yet I do hope for that I cannot see.
That which I love I almoft seems to touch,
Which makes me weep to think my hopes are such,
I catch at Apples which from me do fly,
Like vanity; or the stream which glides by,
Shall I then never be posseft of thee,
Untill the winds and sea so pleased be?
When wind and water fickle be, shall I
Upon the vwind and water fill relie?
Shall I be hindred by the raging seas?
The Goats, Boote, or the Pilejades?
If I have any courage, that I haue,
Love shall embolden me to swim to thee,
And if I promise, I will come awa,
And perform promise w/out all delay.
If seas continue still their raging anger,
I'll try to swim to thee in despite of danger;
Either my bold attempt shall happy prove,
Or death shall give an end unto my love.
Yet do I wish my body may be driven,
Like to a wrack to thy beloved haven.
Then thou wilt weep on it, and say 'was I
Was the occasion, that this man did dye.

I know when thou hast in my Letter found
 This word of death, thou will have the bad sound.
 Fear not; but see the sea may now incline
 To calm itself, when your prayers I pray with music.
 If it were calm until I did from thence,
 Arriv'd again let it be blustring weather,
 In the Harbour of thy Castle, I abide,
 And in thy chamber at late anchor ride.
 Let blustring Boreas strongly there inclose me,
 I delight to stay there though no opposite me.
 For then I will be weary, and most slack
 To venture to return, or to swim back.
 On the dead billows I'll not rest in vain,
 Nor on the rough and racing sea complain.
 The winds and thy embraces should keep me
 Wind-bound, and love-bound, still to stay with thee,
 Yet soon as the sea permits I'll begin
 To use my arms, and unto thee I'll swim,
 And let thou carefull to put forth a light
 Upon thy bower, to direct my sight.
 Yet till then let my Letter lodge this night
 With thee, as Hanging of thy delight.
 Which though it go before me, I do pray,
 That I may follow it without delay.

The Drowned of the River and the Sea.

HENRI received another letter answered it with many professions of mutual esteem, and then said to himself his country, that he might just now, in his dreams, see him drowning his fackle, thereby to have his eyes closed, insomuch of his eyes love, sometimes inventing, that the sea, sometimes leaving left his loved son, others than fearing that his son drowning it so the custome of Lovers who are apt to inspiration. Lastly, since

 p. 140. the position of the poet is not exactly as the old reader is accustomed to see it, the reader is directed to the note on p. 140.

HERO to LEANDER

THAT health Leander which thou sent' st in word,
 Come and more ready to me afford.
 For our joyes are deferred by thy stay,
 And my love growes impatient of delay.
 Our love is equal, but I am the weaker,
 For men are of a stout and stronger nature.
 Maids have a tender body and soft mind,
 If thou do stay, I shall with grief be p'n'd.
 You men can s^t end the tedious time and leasure,
 In hunting or some other countrey pleasure,
 Or sometimes you can go unto the Court,
 Or in riding, or tilting take your sport.
 You often Hawk, and Angle many a time,
 And spend some hours in drinking of rich wine.
 But unto me love doth a torment prove,
 I have no busines here to do, but love.
 Thou onely art a pleasure unto me,
 I love thee more than can believed be.
 For either with my Nurse I talk of thee,
 Wondring what stayeth thy comming unto me.
 Or looking to the Sea, sometimes I chide
 The sea, 'cause it doth still forough abide,
 or when I see the sea is calmer grown,
 I think that when thou ma'st thou wilt not come.
 While I complain, fed me sleeping in my惺惺¹ []
 Which with a trembling hand my old Nurse layes.
 Then I do look if any paine return,
 of my foot-sleeps, which the sandayes ² return, evill
 And

And oftentimes I enquire if any be a w^m i^m won^m i^m A.
Bound to Almer^m; to write to abde^m; en^m g^m i^m g^m i^m C.
And I do kill thy clothes that did^m los^m h^m e^m s^m w^m b^m A.
When thou didst swim the Helle^m with me^m f^m a^m g^m n^m i^m A.
When day is done and the moe^m friendly night^m i^m d^m a^m h^m A.
With spang^m ed stars he^m i^m p^m the day^m to night^m h^m a^m A.
Then I set ou^m a light^m at hand^m i^m n^m d^m h^m i^m A.
Upon my Tower, to guid thee in the d^m i^m n^m g^m i^m A.
And then sometimes with spinning I assy^m; en^m i^m n^m i^m A.
To passingime which runs so slow away^m; i^m v^m a^m d^m A.
And that I may the tedious hours beguile^m; ed^m n^m i^m A.
I talk of my L^m a^m d^m all the while^m; ad^m y^m e^m v^m i^m g^m A.
And to my chur^m I speak thus; do^m not that I i^m d^m g^m A.
Think that my joy and love is coming now^m; b^m v^m i^m A.
Or think^m it thou that his friends watch him; that he^m g^m i^m A.
Is hindred so from coming^m; unto the d^m a^m n^m g^m i^m A.
Do^m st thou ha^m this^m that he^m v^m e^m n^m now begins^m; i^m l^m A.
To put off his cloaths^m; and anoint his t^m i^m b^m v^m A.
ye^m l^m a^m y^m e^m s^m my old Nut^m; who did strive to keep^m i^m g^m A.
Time with her head while she did nodding sleep^m; s^m i^m A.
And sens^m le^m of all love^m you^m d^m not though^m i^m a^m l^m A.
Did want thy kisses^m; and sweet company^m; i^m n^m i^m A.
Then^m I should say to her a little after^m; d^m v^m a^m l^m g^m A.
Now I do think he^m is in swimming through the water^m; i^m v^m A.
And having drawn my shield forth^m; I would say^m; I n^m d^m A.
Now I do think he^m is in the middle way^m; a^m g^m b^m n^m i^m A.
Then I look^m d^m forth^m; and for fully did pray^m; i^m b^m v^m A.
The w^m nd would favour me upon the way^m; m^m o^m d^m A.
Sometimes I listned unto every voice^m; i^m n^m d^m n^m a^m A.
Thinking thou w^m e^m come^m; if I heard a noise^m; i^m n^m A.
Thus I would spend most of the night^m; till sleep^m I a^m d^m A.
Upon my weary eyes^m; by stealth did creep^m; a^m s^m e^m d^m A.
And sometimes thou sleep^m i^m with me^m; v^m i^m my dream^m; v^m i^m A.
And art com^m i^m strug^m g^m i^m t^m i^m b^m o^m h^m d^m o^m f^m g^m A.
And

And now methinks that in my dores I see
 Thee swimming, now thin are imbracing me.
 And now to clench thy wet locks I do strive,
 And in thy waves before me do thine revives.
 And other things I dream of which must be Concealed at this time for modesty.
 For that which in the doing seem'd not well,
 yet being done it is full me to tell.
 But woe is me, these pleasures are soon done,
 For when thy dreams doth vanish, then are spent
 O let us at the lengthe more fully meet,
 That our joyes may be red and more sweet.
 VVhy have I thin from thy nights from these?
 And why do I absent thyselfe from me?
 Though the Scares for swimming are but few,
 yet yester night the winds wrothly did me harm.
 And why didst thou then fear to swim at me?
 VVhy didst thou then opportunity let me not?
 Though you have another season, yet at last
 Because this was the first thine ventre best, and after that
 The fickle sea doth quickly change her face,
 But thou canst swim in one little space,
 An I suppose winds and tempest should keep thee if ere VVhilest I bathed abo, thou swoln waching four.
 Then I with him clim'de with almy high enough,
 And I would pray the sea might fill me though.
 But why dost thou the which said, See now few,
 VVhich formerly by thine deliue & note
 For I remember thou didst bring to me vWhen the Scais were as rough as now they be VVhen I did with thy not to safe to be,
 Left thy ralnche should make me creap to thee.
 But where is all thy courage now become?
 Who through the Halespore didst of thy force

LIB. I.

I do not thinke such rath adyentures made
 But when the sea is calm thy journey talke.
 If thou dost love me still, as thou dost write,
 And that our flame of love burns clear and bright.
 I fear not winds so much that crofe my mind
 As that thy love should prove chiefe as wind.
 Or that thou think it me unworthy to enter
 Such dangers, and for my sake no adyenture.
 And sometimes I am very much afraid,
 Left thou of Abydas seeme it aforesaid.
 But it would grieve me more then all the rest,
 If thou shouldest love another sweet heart best.
 Or if some Harlots armes shouldest thou Embroyer,
 While that her new love doth the old displace.
 O may I dye before that I do see
 My self in such a maner my selfe by shot,
 Yet do I not write this, because that I
 From thee, or fame, have cause of jealousy.
 Yet still I fear (who can securely live,) consider and an
 For absence doth often suspicion move,
 Those lovers are happy that present are,
 And know when to be jealous, when not to be.
 We vainly fear, and flie the true injurie,
 And nourish in our bosom fond jealousies,
 O would st thou come, or else would I might send
 No woman hinders thee but the harsche wind,
 Which when I knowe, belives me I shall die
 With griefe to think upon thy injury.
 For if that thou hadst a desire to lead
 Me to my grave, thou mightst it before offend.
 But thou wilt not offend, my soars are vain,
 I know the winters bothe times do thee detaine,
 Woe's me! the billowes do go rough and high,
 And obscure clouds do darken all the sky.

245
Ovid's Epistles

Or Helle's Mother makes the sea-waves weep,
While they her Daughters obsequies do keep.
Or Juno her step mother now doth please,
Chang'd to a goddess, thus to vex the seas.
This ex unto young minds unkind doth prove,
It drowned Helle and doth crosse my love.
If Neptune his own Love had call'd to mind,
Our love had not been cast so by the wind.
It is no fable that thou didst approve
Of fair Amyone, and her didst love.
Alcyone, and Ceyx th' Sweet-hearts were,
And Medea before she had shaky hair.
Leander and Cesario Pleiades,
And many I have read of besides these.
O Neptune thou these Sweet-hearts hadst in store,
As Poets do report, and many more.
Since thou so oft the force of love didst prove,
Why still from comming doff thou stay my love?
Spare us, let stormes rage in the Ocean wide,
The Sea doth two parts of the world divide.
For thos to tosse great shippes doth most meet,
Or expell thy rage in scattering a Fleet.
To disturbe these seas can no glory be,
Or to hinder a young man would swin to me.
For know Leander nobly is descended,
Not from Myutes ill of these befriended.
Preserve us both, for while that he doth swim,
"He's in the water, but my life's in him.
But now my candle (by whose watchfull light
As it stood by me, I these lines did write) began to sparkle at that very time,
Which he did take to be a happy signe.
And my Nurse put wine to it, to maintain
The Lamp, and cherish the reviving flame.

Say

Sayes she, here will be strangers I do think
To morrow and with these words she doth drink.
Leander come, and let our number be
Increas'd, for I do love thy company.
Leander unto thy own love return,
For why should I still lye alone, and mourn?
Thou haft no cause thus fearfull still to be,
Venus will calm the sea, and favour thee.
Sometimes to wade through the sea I begin,
But this sea hath to women fatall bitt.
For Jason over it in safety came,
But a woman give to these seas their name.
If thou fear'st thou should'st want strength to performe
This double labour; to come, and return:
Let us in the midst of the sea both meet,
And with a kisse each other kindly greet.
Then to our Cityes both return again,
This would some comfort be, though it were vain.
I would that we had no regard of Fame,
Which makes us love in secret, nor of shame.
"For love and fearfullnesse do ill agree;
That persuades to pleasure, this to modesty.
When that young Jason did to Calches come,
He bore away Medea with him soon.
Soon as Paris to Lacedaemon came,
He straight returned with his prey again.
Thou com'st to me, but leavest me behind,
And swim'st when ships can scarce a passage find.
But my Leander have a care hereafter,
Not only to despise, but fear the water.
Strong ships unto the sea are made a scorri,
Think'st thou thy armes can more than Oars performe?
The Mariners (Leander) fear to swim,
Till they are forc'd, when they have ship-wrackt bin.

VVo's me, I pe swade 'gainst that I require,
Let not my words discourage thee I desire.
VWith thy arms swim through the seas, which being done,
Embrace me with those arms when thou art come:
But as oft as I to the blew seas look,
My heart is with a sudden cold fear strook.
And I am troubled with my last nights dream,
Though I sacrific'd 'gainst that it did mean
About morning, when the Candle sleepy grew
And wint'd, when dreams most usually are true;
Out of my crow sie fingers fell my thread,
And on my pillow I did rest my head
When in my dream I thought that I had seen
A Dolphin, that on the rough waves did swim.
VWhich the waves cast up on the shore, and left
Upon the boiling lands, of life bereft.
I know not what this might presage, or mean,
Stay till the Sea be calm, slight not my dream;
If thou wilt not spare thy self, spare thou me,
My life and happiness consists in thoe.
I hope the rough seas will grow calm, then stay
And through the calm seas cut thy gentle way.
And till then, since thou can't nor swim, nor come,
Let this Letter make the time not seem long.

The Argument of the nineteenth Epistle.

*A*cting going to Diana's sacrifice, which were celebrated by Virgins in Dolos, the chieftest Island of all the Cyclades in the Egean sea, fell in love with Cydope a noble Maid; but he in regard of the inequality of his birth, not daring to sollicite her love, did cunningly write on a fair Apple these two versets,

L. 2

Fus.

*Fusa tibi sane per mysticas sacra Diana,
Me tibi tecumque am cumdiam, spons' am, futur' am.*

By Diana's sacred rites I swear to thee,
Thy loving Comfort and Wife I will be.

And so he cast the Apple at the Maids feet ; who ignorant of his cunning, reading it at unawares, she promised that she would be wife to Acastus. For it was a Law, that was spoken before the gods in the Temple of Diana should be ratified. So that Acastus endeavours in this Epistle to persuade her, that Diana had inflicted sickness on her, because she had violated her promise made in the goddesse presence. And to allure her to his desires, his Exordium endeavours to make her confident to read without any suspicion of deceit, like the former. Afterward he strives to make her husband contemptible in her sight, persuading her that he was the cause of all her sickness.

ACONTIUS to CYDIPPE.

Be not afraid, since that thou shalt not swear,
As thou didst before to thy Lover, here;
For thou didst swear enough at that same time,
When thou didst promise that thou wouldest be mine.
Read it, and so may the sickness leave thee,
And pains, which also are a pain to me.
For why shouldest thy ingenuous cheeks be spred,
As in Danae's temple with blushing red,
Since to perform thy promise I do move thee,
And not loosely, but as a husband love thee.
For if those words thou wouldest but call to mind,
Which I did write upon the Apples rinde;
And cast before thee, being read by thee,
In reading it thou didst promise to me,
Even that which I do now of thee desirous,
My words and faith do not at once expire.

VVben

When Diana depriv'd thee first of health,
I fear'd it; Virgin think upon thy self.
And now I fear the same; for now at length
The flame of love in me hath gotten strength.
My strong affection doth increase, and grow,
Encourag'd by that hope which you did shew.
Thou gav'st me hope, from thee it did proceed,
Diana is a witness to thy deed.
For thou didst swear by Diana's majesty,
Acamius: I do mean to marry thee.
And to these words which from thy mouth then went,
Diana bow'd in token of consent.
If thou doft urge, thou werst deceiv'd by me,
The deceit came from love, my love from thee.
Seeking thereby to thee to be united,
That should win favour, wherewith thou art friglited.
I me not so crafty by nature or use,
Thy beauty doth this craftiness infuse.
Ingenious love, and not my art first joyn'd
Those words which thee to me did firmly bind.
For love this cunning trick to me disclos'd
And words of marriage into lines compos'd.
yet let this Act of mine deceitfull prove,
If it be deceit to get what we love.
And now I write, for favour I intreat,
Complain of this, if this be a deceit.
If loving thee, an injury I do thee,
Though thou forbid me, I will love and woe thee.
Same have by force their Sweet-hearts away brought,
To write a Letter, shall it be a fault?
Since that a Letter a new knot doth tyo
Of that promis'd love between thee and I.
Though thou art coy to me, yet I shall make thee
More kind, and I do know that I shall take thee.

For albeit thou scape out of this net,
Thou shalt not scape all those which love can set,
And if that gentle means, and art do fail,
Then force against thy coinesle shall prevail.
I do not hold that Paris was in fault,
or those who their desires by force have sought.
And so will I: although that death should be
His sad reward, that ventures to steal thee.
Wert thou less fair, my suit would be more cold,
But now thy beauteous face doth make me bold.
My flame of love proceeds from thy fair eyes,
Which do out-shine the bright stars in the skies.
And from thy white neck, which thy brown hair graces,
And from thy armes fit onely for imbraces.
Thy modest countenance also taketh me:
Where silent beauties sweetly placed be:
Thy feet like ivory are so pure and white,
That Tbetis, I suppose, hath not the like.
I were happy, if I might praise the rest,
Thy parts summ'd up together would be best.
It is no wonder since thou art so fair,
It by thy own words I did thee infare.
For if thou shouldest confess thy self to be Taken by my deceit and treachery;
Let me bear the envy of it, and blame,
So that I may the fruits of love obtain.
Acbilles did by force fair Briseis take,
yet she lov'd him, and would not him forsake.
Find fault with what thou wilt and angry be,
So that in danger I may enjoy thee.
I that have mov'd your anger, will appease you,
And if you give me leave, I'll strive to please you.
For I will stand before you, and there weep,
While my tears with my words due time shall keep.

And

And like some servant that correction fears,
 I hold my hands up, and beg with my tears,
 Assume your right, I me a slave to your beautey,
 Be you my Mistress, and teach me my duty.
 Although that you should strike me, and should tear
 In an imperious manner my long hair.
 I'll suffer all, and onely afraid be,
 Lest you should hurt your hand with striking me.
 Thou needst not fetter me with iron chains,
 "He serveth willingly whom love constraines.
 When thou hast satisfyed thy wrath on me,
 Thou wilt then say; how patient is he?
 And noting my patience say, since I see
 That he can serve so well, he shall serve me.
 I know thou dost condemn me in absence,
 And my good cause doth want a just defence.
 That only which I on the Apple writ
 Is my offence, yet love indited it.
 Besides Diana should not mocked be,
 Keep thy promise with her, though not with me.
 She saw the blush, when as thou art deceiv'd.
 And she did hear those words which thou didst read.
 And who can be more violent than she,
 To those that do prophane her Maj. sty.
 Who more angry than Althea with her son,
 More fierce then was the Boar of Calydon.
 She made ~~the~~ hounds their Master hunr,
 As he with them to chase wild beasts was wont.
 She did Nisus to a stome transforme
 Which in Bythinia stands, and seems to mourn.
 Cydippa, I dare not speak truth to thee,
 Let my admonishment seem false to be.
 yet I must speak, her wrath inflicts on thee
 This sicknesse, when that thou shouldest marri'd be.

From perjury thee'd have thee keep thy self
 "By sicknesse she would bring thy mind to health,
 And when to break thy vow thou wouldest begin,
 She keeps thee from committing of that sin.
 Then do not shou ~~Diss~~ more incense,
 She may be brought to remit thy offence.
 That so thy feayer may not quite destroy
 Thy beauty sav'd, that I may it enjoy.
 Preserve that beauty, which my love first bred,
 Where snowy whitenesse shaddoweth the red,
 May those would croile our love, endure that pain,
 Which I while thou art sick do now sustain.
 I would not have thee sick, nor married be,
 I know not which of theie would most grieve me.
 Sometimes it grie'veth me, that I should grieve thee,
 And that I did so cunningly deceive thee.
 For my mistris's perjury, O punish me.
 ye gods, from punishment let her be free.
 And sometimes I occasion take to go
 By the door, that I may know how you do.
 And in a secret manner enquiring keep
 Of your'maid, how you eat, and take your sleep.
 I would I had been a Physician bred,
 To feel thy pulse, and sit upon thy bed.
 And woe is me, that I must absent be,
 While that my rival is perhaps with thee.
 He holds thy hand, and sits on thy beds side,
 Who is by all the gods, and me envy'd.
 And while that he thy beating pulse doth try,
 Thy white arm he doth often touch thereby.
 He handles thee, and then perhaps a kisse,
 Rewards his service with toie great a blisse.
 Who hath permitted thee to reap my crop?
 And take away the fruits of all my hope?

Her

Her self, and Kisses thou must understand
Are mine by promise, then take off thy hand.
Take off thy hand, for she my own shall be,
Unlesse thou wilt commit adultery.
Some other Maiden chuse that yet is free,
For of her tenemen I must Land-lord be.
Thou may'st believe out covenants if not me,
To shew they're firm let her read them to thee,
Therefore thou haft no right, I say to thee,
Vnto her marriage bed, 'tis kept for me.
Though her Father to thee dip her affign,
Yet thy right cannot be so good as mine.
Her Father did betroch her unto thee,
But she her self did give her self to me,
He promis'd before men she should be thine,
She promis'd before Diana she would be mine.
He breaks his word, she violates her oath,
And doft thou dote which is the worst of both?
Lastly consider, what the event may be,
For he's in health, but sick in bed is she.
In our contentions too much odds there are,
Thy hope is not like mine, nor yet thy fear.
Thy love is not so dangerous but I
If I should suffer a repulse must dye.
Perhaps that hereafter thou wilt approve her,
But it is I that now do clearly love her.
Therefore in justice, that same love of thine
Vnto my love all title should resign.
Since for thy love he unjustly doth contend,
Cydiappe why do I this Letter send?
Diana for his sake doth thee afflict,
Forbid him then thy house, if thou haft wit.
And for his sake this sicknesse light on thee,
May he that causeth it, so punish'd be.

For

For if thou wilt his fained love reject,
 And not love whom the goddess doth not respect.
 Thou shalt then presently regain thy health,
 When thou art well, I shall be well my self.
 Fear not sweet Maid, thou shalt have thy health now,
 If to the goddess thou wilt keep thy vow.
 "The heavenly powers our sacrifices scorne,
 "Unless we faithfully our vowes perform
 Yet some do lancing suffer for healths sake,
 And some for health do bitter potions take.
 But if thou keep thy self from perjury,
 Thou shalt preserve thy health, thy faith, and me.
 Thy former fault may yet a pardon find,
 Through ignorance, or forgetfulness of mind.
 Thy sicknesse, and my words admonish thee,
 "For know the gods cannot deceiv'd be.
 Yet shouldst thou scape this sickness, being a Maid,
 Being married, thou wilt need Dian's aid,
 Having heard thy promise she will aske thee
 If I the father of thy burthen be.
 If thou do st vow, yet she will not believe,
 If thou swear'st she knows tis but to deceive,
 For thee, not for thy self, this care I take,
 And my mind is thus troubled for thy sake.
 Let not thy Parenis for thy sicknesse weep,
 Or why do st thou in ignorance them keep?
 Though to thy Mother thou doft all relate,
Cyriop, thou need'st not to blush thereat.
 Tell her how I did first behold thy eyes,
 While thou did'st to Diana sacrifice.
 And at the first side if thou marked'st me,
 I stood and gaz'd with fixed eyes on thee.
 And while I wondring stond in - cloak oft fell
 From my shoulder, which passion seem'd to tell,

And after that an Apple I did sit,
 Wherein most cunningly these words I writ,
 Which in Diana's presence read by thee,
 Thou didst bid thy self thin to marry me.
 Then she the Tenour of the words may know,
 As thou read'st them once, read them to her so.
 Then she will say forthwith, pray marry me
 Him, whom the goddess hath allotted thee.
 Since that Diana is pleas'd, chuse no other,
 For the goddess will be to thee a mother.
 And tell her if she aske thee, who I am,
 The goddess choice can be to thee no shame.
 In Cæa where Gorycian Nymphs have,
 In Parnassus hill an old famous Cave.
 I was born, and (if birth be not contemn'd)
 From no base Parantage I did descend.
 I have wealth, and my life from spot is free,
 And there is none whom I love more than thee.
 Had'st thou not sworn, yet thou need'st must like
 Such a husband, and I such a wife would seek.
 Diana in a dream bid me to write
 These lines, and waking love bid me indite.
 And as loves arrow now hath wounded me,
 Take heed Diana's arrow wound not thee.
 At once have pity on me, and thy self,
 At once thou mayst restore us both to health;
 Which if thou grant, when the Trumpets proclaim,
 Diana's solemn sacrifice again,
 I'll offer a golden Apple and on it.
 These two verses shall be most faithfully writ,
 And this Apple offer'd to testify.
 The gods the words writ in't did rarely.
 Left a longer letter try thee being awake,
 I have but one word more to write, or speak.

And

And in the usuall way as all can tell
I will conclude my letter here ; Farewell.

Ep. 22.

The Argument of the twentieth Epistle.

WHEN Psyche understood that offended Diana had inflicted this Fever on her, she condescended to accept this desire against her parents will, rather than to endure the torment of her sickness. First she

He answers, that she durst not read his Epistle aloud, lest he should be deceived with the fallacy of an oath, as she was in reading the lines writ on the Apple. Then amplifying the deceit of that Apple, she writes against Acontius.

CYDIPPE, ACONTIUS.

IN silence I thy Letter read, for fear
 Lest unawares I by the gods should swear.
 I think, again thou would'st have opened me,
 But that I have promised my self to thee.
 I read it, lest it I unkin'd should seem,
 Diana should have more offended been.
 Though to Diana I do incense offer,
 yet she defends that wrong which thou didst proffer.
 And if I may give credit unto thee,
 For thy sake she with sickness visits me.
 Visto Hippolytus she was not so kind,
 For at her hand more favour thou dost find.
 A Virgin of a Virgin should take care,
 Although I have not long to live I fear.
 I am sick, yet the causes of my grief,
 Physicians know not, nor can yeild releif.
 How sick am I, while I these lines do write,
 I scarce can sit within my bed upright.
 I fear lest any but my Nurse should find,
 That we by Letters do exchange our mind.
 To visitants, while she the dore doth keep,
 (To give me time to write) she sayes I sleep.
 When this colour the matter cannot hide,
 Lest by sleeping too long truth be discry'd.
 If some come, who to deny 'tis unsiting,
 She gives me then a fained sign by spitting.
 Then I break off, and lest it should be spy'd,
 In my trembling bosome the Letter hide.

Wheat

And in the usuall way as all can tell
I will conclude my letter here; Farewell.

Ep. 22.

The Argument of the twentieth Epistle.

When Cassandra understood that offended Diana had inflicted this Fever on her, she condescended to Arsenius desire against her own will, rather than to endure the torment of her sickness. First line

she durst not read his Epistle aloud; lest he should be deceived with the fallacy of an oath, as she was in reading the lex writ on the Apple. Then amplifying the deceit of this Apple, she writes against Aeneas.

CYDIPPE to ACONTIUS.

In silence I thy Letter read, for fear
 Lest unawares I by the gods should swear.
 I think, again thou wouldest have cōfened me,
 But that I have promised my self to thee.
 I read it, lest it I unkind should seem,
 Diana should have more offended been.
 Though to Diana I do incense offer,
 Yet she defends that wrong which thou didst proffer.
 And if I may give credit unto thee,
 For thy sake she with sickness visits me.
 Vnto Hippolytus she was not so kind,
 For at her hand more favour thou dost find.
 A Virgin of a Virgin should take care,
 Although I have not long to live I fear.
 I am sick, yet the causes of my grief,
 Physicians know not, nor can yeild releif.
 How sick am I, while I these lines do write,
 I scarce can sit within my bed upright.
 I fear lest any but my Nurse should find,
 That we by Letters do exchange our mind.
 To visitants, while she the dore doth keep,
 (To give me time to write) she sayes I sleep.
 When this colour the matter cannot hide,
 Lest by sleeping too long truth be discryed.
 If some come, who to deny 'tis unsitting,
 She gives me then a fained sign by spitting.
 Then I break off, and lest it should be spy'd,
 In my trembling bosome the Letter hide.

Whate

When they are gone, then I do write again,
Thus in the midst of pains, I take great pain,
Which didst thou deserve, I could undertake,
Then thou deserv'st, I'll do more for thy sake.
For thy sake, I this sicknesse do sustain,
And for thy imposture thus punisht am,
And thus my beauty which did please thy sight,
Hath hurt thy self, by yeilding thee delight.
If I had apper'd deformed unto thee,
No sicknes had procur'd my misery.
Praise is my ruin, and while you both woe me
'Tis my own beauty that doth thus undo me.
And while both will not yield, both will be mine,
you hinder his desite, he hinders thine.
I am like a ship the wind drives a main
To Sea, but strong tides drive it back again.
My marriage day which my Parents would see
Is at hand, but a feaver troubleth me.
And while the thought of marriage doth at mock,
Death even at my door begins to knock.
Which though I am not guilty makes me fear,
So're of the gods with me offended are.
Some think my sicknes hath but causal boen,
Or the Gods would not have me marry him,
And that thou may'st no: think fame doth detect thee,
For poisoning of thy self they do suspect me,
The cause is hide, but yet my grief lies open,
you do contend, but I with grief am broken.
Tell me and do not unkindly reject me
What is thy hate, if thy love doth afflict me?
If such thy love be, love thy enemy,
But I intreat thee that thou wouldst spare me.
What hope to obtain my love canst thou cherish,
When thou do'st let me by a feaver perish?

If to Diana thou do'st pray in vain
Why do'st thou seek what thou canst not obtain ?

Either thou canst not Diana pacifie ;
If thou canst, but are unmindfull of me,
I would that I had Deles never known ,
At least, at that time had not to it gone .

My ship unhappily did fail that day ,
And through the biew seas cut her fatal way .
Unluckily out of my houfe I did flip ,
When I did go aboard my fainted ship .

Twice the winds to our sailes contrary were ,
yet now I think on't the winds did stand fair ;
It was a fair wind that did drive me back ,
That my unhappy journey I might slack .
Would it had been contrary to my mind ,
But tis folly to complain 'gainst the wind .
For famous Deles I desire to see ,

Me thought my ship fail'd slowly under me .
I hid the Oars because that they did fail ,
And we thought they put out too little sail ,
Having pass'd Tenos , and Andros , the white
Cliffes of fair Delos came within my sight ,
And to the Isle I said, why do'st me shun ?
Do'st still flote in the Sea , 'las thou hast done !

I landed when the Sun had run his course ,

And began to unyoak his purple horse .

Next day when in the East they harnes'd were ,
My mother bid mecombe and dress my hair .
She gave me Rings , my hair with gold she dress ,
And put on me apparell of the best .

To the gods of the Island we did dispense ,
Our quirits , and offered yellow frankincense .
And while my Mother bedeweing with blood
The smoaking Altar , sacrificing stood ;

My carefull Nurse led me another way,
 While she, and I through sacred places stroy.
 We walk about while we admired there
 The gifts of Kings, and Images there were.
 We admir'd Apollos Altar, and the tree
 That help'd Letona in child-delivery.
 And all that had in Dels famous been,
 We saw, and more than yet hath mention'd been.
 And here Aconsias thou dost cast a leek
 On me, conceiving I might be soon took.
 I return'd to Diana's Temple that hath
 Fair steps, and what place ought to be more safe?
 Thou threw'st an Apple for me with this verse,
 Which I was ready again to rehearse;
 My Nurse took't up, and wondring, wished me
 To read it, so I read thy treachery.
 When to this word of marriage I came,
 I felt that both my cheeks did blush for shame.
 And when my eyes had serv'd thy turn to read
 These lines, I looked down, and hung my head.
 But ye: what glory hast thou got thereby?
 To deceive a Maid is no victory.
 I stood not with my Axe and bucler there,
 As Penthesiles did at Troy appear.
 No gold belt from me thou did'st bear away,
 Like that was taken from Hypsilia.
 Then why should'st thou rejoice to have betray'd
 By thy deceitful words a harmless Maid?
 An Apple deceiv'd Astarte and Cydippe?
 Thou shalt another Hippograes be
 But if that wanton Boy did thee enflame,
 Whose quiver (thou laist) doth Loves shafts contain;
 Why did'st thou not in honest sort come to me?
 And not strive to deceive me, but to woe me,

why

Why didst thou not by words thy worth express,
To gain my love, while thou didst love profess ;
Why didst thou seek to compell, not persuade
My love ? by promises on thy part made.
What doth my former oath now profit thee ?
Though I call'd Diana, it so testifie,
It is the mind that swears but my tongue swek ;
And swore this oath without my minds consent.
"An oath should be took with a knowing mind,
"Therefore a rash oath hath no power to bind.
If willingly I promis'd a husband unto thee,
Marriage, thou mightst then seek it now of me.
But if those words I unswore did speak,
Thou stand'st on words that are but vain and weak.
I did not swear, therefore thou canst not be,
By reading tho'c words, a husband unto me.
If such falle oaths to bind effectual were,
To grow rich in shorst time thou needst not fear.
For all the Kings in the world may seigne
Their right unto thee by reading a line,
Thou art greater than Diana be lieve me,
If in thy words so great a power there be,
yet though my oath, and thy love here I flie,
And have firslyg pleased, my tale is right.
yet I confess I fear Diana's wrath,
Who now I doubt this me afflicted hath,
as oft as I do intend to marry,
I do fall sick, and so am fere'd to marry.
Thrice Hymen now unto my bed-side came,
And finding me sick, he went back again.
And with his tibel hand he scarce could light
His Torch, or make it an burn clear, and bright.
Sometimes with powders he perfumes his hair,
While he hieyellowe robes doth wear.

But when up to my chamber he doth come,
And beholds me, and weeping he is gone.
He pluck'st a ho Garland from his shining hair,
And tears the flowers in it placed were.
Such mourning doth with him so ill agree,
That his blushing cheeks red as his robe be.
VVhile a hot tearey now tormenteth me,
So that I think the bed-cloathes heavy be.
I see my parents for me weep and rage,
Who am now nearer death then startinge.
O D a s ; that dost wear thy painted quare,
Help me now by xpalt/ & skilb thy brother,
Since he can cure the sick, then why should I
To thy disgrace, without thy help here dye?
VVhen thou dost bathe thy self I ne're mistakē
Like rash Adonis who beheld thee naked.
On thy altars I have often sacrific'd,
My mother was riot by any mother despis'd.
This only was my fault, that I had read
A perjur'd verse, and was thereby deceiv'd.
Therefore Adonis for my sake now bring
To Diana's alter thy own offering
If that the goddesse be offendē with me,
Thef'st to be thine; why doth she hinder me?
For if that she do take away my life,
Thou canst not hope that I should be thy wife.
He that should be my Husband, doth not stand
By my bed, and lift me up with his hand.
He sits indeed on my bed's side, but he
Attempes no action of immodesty,
And knows not what to think of me at all,
When without cause peers from my eyes do fall.
He seldom doth a kisse to me impart,
And with a fearefull voyce calls me Sweet-heart.

I wonder my disdain he hath not spy'd, over I know I say
 For when he comes I turn on my left side, and my eye he
 I will not speak, but sleep I counterfeit, I abhorred him
 And pull my hand back, when he would take it, and then
 Then does he fetch a deep sigh, because I sigh and say
 Am offended with him, he knows not why.
 When as in truth, if I should speak my mind,
 (Cause in my sufferings thou dost pleasure find,) I
 Thou dost deserve our anger, who didst set me in this case
 Thy cunning toyles, to catch me in thy net, and then hit
 Why dost thou write thou wouldst fain visit me? in blot I
 Since in thy absence thou hast wounded me, and hit me
 Why thou art call'd a son, I have found, no sume no
 Cause like an arrow thou far off dost wound. I
 That wound is not yet healed which no dart,
 But these words I read, gave unto my heart. You ob yond I
 Why shouldst thou come and here behold me lie yet wond
 The wretched trophy of thy victory? I laid down my hand
 For now my bloudie face colour don't quite fail, in you quod not
 And I am like thy Apple wan and pale.
 My white cheeks are not lightly stain'd with red,
 Like spotted marble newly polish'd.

Set like the colour of a silver Cup,
 When with cold water it is filled up.

If thou sawest me, I should not seem the same,
 When by Art thou soughtst my love to gain,
 And ask the goddesse to be freed from it.
 And thou wilt send me then another line,
 That I may swear that I shall ne're be thine.
 It prethes come, since thou desir'st the same,
 And see if thou canst know me now again.
 Though (Aconitum) thy breast like Iron be,
 Thou wouldst pray the goddesse to pardon me.

yet I would have thee know, we sink Appalas,
To regain health what course I ought to follow,
And as fame doth sepa're, the afflicted, I
Was punished for my inidelity,
And thus the gods in Orakl unfor'd me,
Who to thy desires favourable be,
Whence comes it, but becaus'these climbing Letters
In the Apple tree make the gods thy beot's? ^{in that}
Since thou dost rule the gods, thou must rule me,
And therefore willingly I yield to thee. ^{for you} I told my master how I had beoty'd
I told my master how I had beoty'd
My self to thee, at which he was diligy'd, you must conuine the rest, for I have told
Already, I feare more than doth become
A Virgin, finde in this Letter you see
I freely do unfeM any mind to that, ^{as I know} old
Now my wint joynts are weary of enditing, it alredy
And my sick hand is cipt with hys writing, ^{hys}
So hoping that we shall together meet,
My Letter with a farewell with the rest.

The Argument of the two and twentieb Esiles.

How being sometimes a Boatman Phaë came unto him, and desirous to be carried over the water gravis, which he did, not knowing her to be a goddesse, whereupon shee gave him a box of oynement, wherewith anoynting himselfe, he became so beautiful, that all the women in the Isle Leedes were in love with him, and especially Sappho did impatiently affect him. But when Phaë went to Sappho

Servitor of the best of her loves, and fears of his disdain, despaired, and durst not shew her self with the Sea, from Laces a Promised part of Jove. But yet unconstant to her first resolve, she endeavours by this Epistle to recal him back, and gain his love of which she formerly despaired, and to win him to a dislike of his present estate and manner of life. Lastly, she useth all Arguments that might move him to pity. And in this Epistle Ovid hath most lively express'd the soft and amorous affections of love.

S A P H O to P H A O N.

Soon as thou do'st behold my studious hand,
Whence the Letter comes do'st thou understand?
Or unlesse in it thou Sapho's name read,
Do'st thou not know from whence it doth proceed?
Thou may'st wonder why I in this yerse vwrite
Since I in Lyric numbers do delight.
The weeping Elegy will fitting prove
To suite unto our sad, and mournfull love.
But in light Lyric verses there appears
No doleful harmony, that my true tears,
For as a field of corn on fire, whose flame
The Eastern wind doth blow up, and maintain,
Doth burn space, being fanned by the wind,
Even so the flame of love doth fire my mind.
Though Phœbus live near Atis far from me,
My flames of love hotter than Atis be.
So that verses to my harpe I cannot set,
"A quiet mind doth verses best beget.
The Dryad's do not help me at this time,
Nor Leibian, nor Pierian Muses nine.
I have Amthone, and Cydane white,
And Atis is not pleasant in my sight.
And many others that were lov'd of me,
But now I have plac'd all my love on thee.

Thy

Thy youthfull years to pleasure do invite, O
 Thy tempting beauty hath betra'ld my sight, I
 Take a quiver, and thou w'lt Appelle be giv'n, W
 Take Horns, and Bachs I will be like to thee, A
 Postur's lov'd Daphne, Bacchus, Arden, I
 Yet in the Lyrick verse no knowledge had she, W
 But the Muses dictate unto me smooth rhymes, C
 So that the world knows my name and lines, C
 Nor hath A' cens for the harp more praise, C
 Though he by higher subjects goes his Bayes, C
 "If nature beauty unto me deny, C
 "My wit the want of be, ury doth supp'y, C
 Though low of stature, yet my fame is tall, C
 And high, for through the world 'tis known to all, C
 Though for my beauty I have no renown, C
 Persius lov'd Cepheas, that was brown, C
 White Doves do often pair with spotted Doves, C
 And the green Parrot the black Turtle loves, C
 If thou w'lt have a love as fair as thee, A
 Thou must have none, for none so fair can be, A yet once my face did fair to thee appear, C
 And that my speech became me, thou didst swear, C
 And thou wouldest telle me while that I did sing, C
 (For Lovers do remember everything) C
 My kisses, and each part thou didst approve, C
 But specialy whend I did write of love; C
 Then I did please thee with my wanton strain, C
 With witty words, and with my amorous vain, C
 But now the Maids of S. oly do please thee, C
 Would I might L. b's change for S. oly, C
 But take heed M. a. resias, now you do C
 Receive this wanderer least you do it rue, C
 Least by his flattering tongue you be betra'ld, C
 What he says to you, he hat to me said.

O Venus help me now in my distrefe;
 Fair goddess, favour now thy Poetess.
 Will fortune always be to me unkind?
 And will she never change her froward mind?
 For I knew sorrow soon, even when that I
 Was six years old, my father first did dye.
 The love of a whore my brother re-came,
 On whom he spent his wealth, and lost his fame.
 Being grown poor then unto See he went,
 To get by piracy what he had spent.
 And because I did blame his courses, he
 My honest counsell scold'd, and hate me.
 And as if these grieses were to light for me;
 you know that I have faulky been with thee.
 And of thee at last I must make complaint,
 Because that I thy company do want.
 In thy absence I do not dress my hair,
 Nor on my fingers any rings do wear.
 A poor and homely weed I do assume,
 Arabias my; he doth not my hair perfume.
 Though I did dress my self for to please thee,
 yet in thy absence why shoul d I dress me?
 Nature hath given me a hart so soft,
 That love doth with his arrow wound it oft.
 For I am still in love, and I do see,
 That I must alwayes thus in love still be.
 The fatall sisters at my birth decreed
 To spin my life forth with an amorous thred:
 Or else my studies are the cause of it,
 Thalia hath giuen me a wanson wit.
 Nor can it in love seem so strange a case,
 That I should love thy young effeminate face.
 Lest Aurore should love thee I was afraid,
 And so she had but Cephæus her staid.

If Phœbe should behold thee, she e're long
Would love thee more then her Adonis,
And beauteous Venus long ago had carried
Thee unto heaven in her Ivory Chariot;
But that the goddesse wily did faresee,
That Mar himself would fall in love with thee,
Such was thy beauty, and thy comely grace,
For in thy youth thou hadst a Virgins face.
Return to me, thou sweetest flower of beauty,
For to love thee, I know k is my duty.
I do not here intreat thee to love me,
But that thou wouldest permit me to love thee,
And while I write, I weep even for thy sake,
And all those blots thou see'st, my tears did make.
Though thou resolvest to go, yet modesty
Might have enforced thee, to take leave of me,
At thy departure thou didst not kill me,
I fear'd that I should forsaken be.
I had no pledges of thy love, for I
Have nothing of thine but thy injury.
This only charge I would have given to thee,
That thou wouldest not be unmindfull of me.
I swear unto thee, by this love of mine,
And by my goddesles the muses time.
When they did tell me that thou hadst took ship,
A long time I could neither speak, nor weep.
My heart grew cold, my silent grief was dumb,
Wanting both tears to vent it self, and tongue,
But when my sorrows I more lively felte,
I tore my hair my tears began to melt.
So that to weep I presently began,
Like Mothers at the burial of a son.
My brother laugh'd, and while that he did walk
And strut by me, he thus began to talk.

Alas!

Alas ; why does my loving sister grieve,
 Thou hast no cause, thy Daughter is alive.
 Thus love and shame together ill agree,
 For I had put off now all modesty.
 And in such manner I abroad did rove,
 That the people thereby discerned my love.

O Phœbus, I do dream of thee always,
 Dreams makes the night more pleasant than the days.
 Dreams make thee present though thou absent art,
 But they weak shadows of true joyes impart.
 Sometimes I think that thou embracest me,
 And sometimes I think hat I imbracest thee.
 That thou doft kiffe me, then I do believe,
 With such kisses as thou doft use to give.
 And sometimes in my dream to thee I speak,
 As if my tongue and senses were awake.
 I cannot tell he :est with modesty,
 For methinks I enjoy thy company.
 But when the sun doth rise and break the day,
 I am sad, because my dreams passe away.
 I'm angry that my fancy is no stronger.
 And that my pleasant dream should last no longer.
 Then to the woods and caves I straight way hie,
 Wherein I enjoy'd thy sweet company.
 As if the woods and caves would comfort me,
 Since they witness of our pleasure be.
 Like one were mad, or enchanted I flye,
 While my hair doth a're my shoulders loose lie.
 Methinks the mossie caves do seem as fair,
 As those which built of costly Marble are.
 I love the wood, under whose leavie shade,
 We oftentimes have both together laid.
 But the wood seems unpleasant unto me,
 As if it mourned for thy company.

And

And I have often gene unto that place,
Whete we have lain together in the grasse;
And laid me down again, and with the showers
Of tears have watered the simpling flowers.
The leaveleſſe trees to mournydo begin
And all the sweet birds have left off to sing.
Only the Nightingale with mournfull song,
In ſadelt notes bewailes her former wrong.
She laments those ſad wrongs she did ſustain,
Of thy forsaking me I do complain,
If ſhe ſung not, nor I complain'd of thee,
The wood more ſilent than the night would be.
There is a Fountain that ſeas clear as glasse,
So that ſome thought a deity in it was;
O're which a great tree doth extend his boughs,
And soft green grasse even round about it growes.
I being weary, by chance I lay down here,
And a Nymph which did to me appear,
Standing before me thus to ſpeak began,
Because thou lov'st, and are not lovd again?
To Leuessa go, if that thou wilt have eafe,
A promontory that o're looks the Seas.
Hence Deuachay for Pyrrh's love.
Did throw himſelf down, and as it did prove,
He had no hurt, but being drenched in
These ſeas, his love to cool did ſtraight begin.
The vertue in this place remains, make haſt,
And from this rock thy ſelf down quickly caſt.
Thus having ſaid, ſhe vaniſht and my fears
Increaſt, my eyes did over-flow with tears.
Fair Nymph I promise thee that I will go,
Enrag'd with love unto that rock you ſhow
Perhaps the light air in her ames will bear me,
I can't be worse, than why ſhould danger fear me?

O love! with thy wings let me be sustain'd,
Left for my death Lemnian seas be blast'd.
Then unto Phœbus I'll my Harpe resign,
And underneath it write this double line;
Sappho O Phœbus offers unto thee
Her Harp, which thou lovest, and was lov'd by me.
If Phœbus to return to me would please,
What need I go to the ~~Alban~~ Seast
Thou canst do me more good, thee I will follow,
Thy beauty is such thou art my Apollo.
Or canst thou harder then a hard Rock be,
And to die in my misery suffer me?
It were far bitter sure that I should join,
In close embraces, my fair brest with thine;
That breast, O Phœbus, which thou didst oft praise,
And which did seem so witty many wayes.
Now I would fain be eloquent, but while
I strive to write in a more elegant stile,
My art doth fail, for grief my wit hath spent
So that my letter is not eloquent.
My former vein of writing verse is done,
My jocund Harp is now grown mute and dumb, ye Lisian Nymphs that marriage do desire,
ye Nymphs so called from the Lisian Lyre,
ye Lisian Nymphs whose love advanc'd by faine,
Come not to hear my Harp, or Lyrist strain.
For that sweet vein I had in former time,
My Phœbus took away who is not mine.
If you send him back, I should regain it,
He is my Gensis that doth give me wit.
But why with prayers seek I to persuade?
Can his heard heart with prayers be soft made?
No, it doth grow more stiffe, and I do find
That all my words are but like empty wind.

But

But I do wish the winds would bring thee back:
Why to return again, art thou so slack?
I have long lookt for thee, then come awy;
VVhy dost thou thus torment me with delay?
VVeigh but thy Anchor, Vents will befriend thee
VVith a good voyage, and a fair wind lend thee,
Cupid to steer thy ship too will not fail,
And he will put out, and take in each sail,
But if thou forsake Lesbian Sappho, I
Have not deserv'd of thee such cruelty;
And by this Letter I would have thee know,
That I my self into the Sea will throw.

Three responsive Epistles of the Poet Aulus Sabinus in answer to

The Argument of Sabinus for Epistles

VULPES having read Democritus Epistles, answ'reth to all objections, and relates his many troubles which he had valiently endur'd. Tyrillus and Pallas having intreated him in future events, he prophacleth soothigh waro, her that be will come home go there is the habit of a lance. There she liveth for herself that Probus groves happy of his son's right after him many drowns. But his son Tristamidus and two servants helping him, he fell upon them, and slew them all, as left his son Tristamidus, whoso he had by Clor, being hit with a poisoned arrow.

THE LOST SISTER OF PENELOPE.

Fortunate Vlissē hath from thee,
Receiv'd thy Letter dear Penelope.
The sight of thy hand and seal, were to me
A kind of comfort in my misery.
Thou doft accuse me, that I am to slack
In returning and coming to thee back.
I had rather thou shouldest esteem me slow,
Then that I should let thee my troubles know.
Greece knew my love unto thee, when I had
For thy love counterfeited my self mad.
For such was then the force of my affection,
That I did counterfeit a fain'd distraction,
Thou wouldft not have me write, but come away;
I make haft but croſſe winds do make me stay.
Troy with the Grecian Maids hate, is defac'd,
I am not there, for Troy is burnt and raz'd.
Delphobus, Agist: Hector, all slain are,
And all the rest of whom thou standit in fear.
I ſcaped the Tbracia, bands when I had slain
Achilles, and to my Tents return'd again.
And beſide me of Gall at Troy No man in it
Did take the falſe palme of victory.
I ſee in the blſſe when a Kingdome is arriv'd
Englourish'd, that it, you ride extoll'd,
With a Kingdome ſit, and to thine great val'ies
A King.

Burn it; for in this woodes horse, quoth she,

The cunning Grecian here inclosed be.

Therefore if you do not this horse destroy,

It shall be the destruction of Troy.

Achilles rites of sepulture did lack,

Till I brought him to Thetis on my back.

The Grecians did my labour so regard,

I had Achilles armour for reward.

yet I have lost all, for the sea hath swallow'd

My shippes, and all the company me follow'd.

Only that constant love I owe to thee,

Continues with me in adversity.

Scylla and Charybdis could not cast away

My love to thee, which still doth with me stay.

Spight of Antiphates my love endur'd,

And though the cunning Syrens me allur'd.

And Circe, nor Calypso could nor charme me,

Thy love against their sorceries did arm me.

Both promis'd that they could immortall make

Me, that I should not fear the Stygian Lake,

For thy sake, & their offer did withhold,

And have suffer'd so much by Sea and Land.

Perhapt when thou these wretched names dost find

In my Letter, it will trouble thy mind,

And of Circe and Calypso to hear,

Perhaps thou wilt be struck into a stan

When I in thy letter Assassirod,

Polybus and Medon, they my fear bred.

Since thou so many youthful suitors hast,

How could I think that thou'rt mainest chaste.

Could thy delight in they ~~tear~~ blubber'd face?

Do not thy tears thy beauty yet debase?

And it seems thou hast given content to marry,

But thy unthriving web doth make them tarry.

For that which thou hast in the day time spun,
 thou unweav'st at night, so 'tis never done.
 Thy Art is good which doth successfull prove,
 To delude their purpose, delay their love.
 O Poliphemus; I do wish that I
 Had dy'd in thy Cave free from misery.
 Would I had been by the Thracian slain,
 When my ships unto Imarm first came,
 Wou'd cruel *P*luto then had satisfied
 His wrath on me, I wou'd that I had dy'd,
 When I descended to the Stygian Lake,
 From thence in safety I returned back.
 For though in thy Letters no dread appear,
 I saw my mothers thin ghost walking there.
 She told me how at home all matters be,
 And to shun my imbraces thrice fled me,
 I saw Proteus, who fate-contemning,
 With his death gave the Troy war beginning.
 And his wife Leda was, who did dye
 That she might bear her husband company.
 I saw Agamemnon, whose wounds bleeding were,
 So that the sight made me let fall a tear.
 He had no hurt at Troy, and also past
 The Zubara Promontory, yet at last
 Having a thousand wounds given him, he dies
 Even then when he to Jove did sacrifice.
 Thus Helen the Grecians ruin bred,
 While she to Troy a stranger so lowed.
 Besides, what profit was it unto me,
Callidore were captives and Audromethe?
 I could have chosen Hecuba for my wife,
 Think not that with a who e I spend my life,
 For I brought Hecuba aboard my ship,
 But she out of her former shape did slip.

For into a Bitch she was straight transform'd,
And her complaints were into barking turn'd.
Then grew angry at these Progencies,
And enrag'd, ~~her~~ made a storm to rise;
So that with wind and waves our ships did strive,
Which tempest round about the world did drive.
But if Tyndis truly foretold me
A prosperous fate after adversity;
Having endur'd so much by land and sea,
I hope my fortunes will more kinder be.
Now Pallas doth protect us from all dangers,
And guides us in our journey among ~~the~~ strangers;
Since Troyes destruction I have Pallas seen
Of late so that her anger spent doth seem,
And whatsoever Ajax did commit,
The Grecians now are punished for it.
Nor was Tyndis too excus'd from danger;
For he like us about the world doth wander.
Nor Teucri that from Telamon first sprung,
Nor he that with a thousand ships did come.
Menelaus was happy, for having got
His wife, he need fear no unhappy lot.
Though the winds or seas did your' journey stay,
Your' love was not hindred by that delay.
The winds nor waves did not hinder your' blisse,
But when you list you could embrace and kisse.
And had I so enjoy'd thy company,
No evil chance could then betide to me,
But since Telemachus is well I bear,
My present troubles I more lightly bear.
I blame thy love in sending him to sea,
Through Sparte, and in Pylos to seek me,
I needs must blame thy love in doing it,
While to the sea thou didst my son costumit.

But fortune may at last yet prove my friend,
And all my troubles may have a fair end.
A Prophet told me, dear wife, we should meet,
And with embraces should catch other greet.
But I will come disguised, so as to be known,
Unto no other but thy self alone.
In a beggers habit I'll be disguised be,
Conceale thy joy, and knowledgement of me,
I'll shew no outward violence when I come,
For so spell a Priest unto me fungi.
But I'll revenge my self even at that time,
When thy wooers are banqueting with wine,
While beggets rayment doth kleesse cover,
And then at last myself I will discoyer.
While at pleases they shall all admire,
That this day would come soon I do desire,
That we may both deare wife, renew our love,
And I to thee busy a kind husband provide.

The Argument of Sabines from Exile.

Emphous in this Epistle endeavours by divers Arguments to excuse his unfaithfulness of returning to Phyllis according to his promise. Alleging that his friends were offended with him for staying so long with her in Thrace, and also the impetuose incautiousness of the weather for sailing, promising however at length to return to Phyllis. He performed his promise, but Phyllis impatient of delay, had strangled her self before he came, and by the mercy of the gods was changed into a leafleſſe Almond tree, which Demophoon embracing, it put forth leaves as if it had been sensible of his return. Which is faint'd, because Phyllis signifies in Greek an Almonds tree, so expressing the name of Phyllis. Because when Zephyrus or the West wind bloweth from Afris into Thrace, that Tree flouriſheth, for Zephyrus signifies as much as ζεφύρος, that is, The life cherifer. which gave occasion to this fiction, that Phyllis transformed into a Tree, seemed to rejoice, and flouriſh, at the return of her Lover.

DEMOPHOON to PHILIS.

From his own Country to Phyllis his friend,
Demophoon doth this his Letter send.
Even thy rememb're that doth still love thee,
My fortunes chang'd, but not my constancy.
Thesers who'e name thou haſt no cauſe to fear,
Thy flame of love for his ſake worthy were.
Meſſeſbeaſt drove out of his royal ſtate,
And the old Tyrant is now dead of late.
He that the Amazons had overcome,
And unto Hercules was companion.
He that did Min's ſon in law become,
When he the Minotaure had overthrown.
He did accuſe me because I did ſlay,
Trifling ſo long with thee in Thrace
For while the love of Phyllis di'd detain thee,
And that a ſoſtneſſe beauty did enflame thee.
Time with a nimble pace di'd ſlip away,
And ſad accidents hapned by thy delay.
Which had been all prevented, hadſt thou come
Or hadſt thou made them void, when they were di'd.
Wher thou diſt Phyllis kingdome love, for ſhe
Then a who'e kingdome was deaſer to thee.

From

From Abbas I this same chiding have,
 And old Ebra who's halfe within her grave.
 Since Tbeus is not their to close their eyes,
 The fault on me for staying with thee lyes.
 I confess they both to me often cry'd,
 VVhen my ship did in Tbracia waters ride.
 The winos stand faire Densibar, why dost stay?
 Go home Dromophess without delay.
 From thy beloved Phyllis example take,
 She loves thee, yet her home she's not forsake.
 She desires not to bear thee company,
 But to return again entreateth thee.
 I with a silent patience heard them chide,
 But their desire I in my thoughts deny'd.
 I thought I could not imbrace thee enough,
 And I was glad to see the sea grow rough.
 Before my father I will this confessie,
 "He that loves worthily may it professie.
 For since such store of worth remains in thee,
 If I do love thee it no shame can be.
 And I do know that Phyllis cannot say,
 I prov'd unkin'd, when I did sail away.
 For when the day came that I must take ship,
 I weep, and comforted thee who didst weep.
 Thou didst grant me a ship of Tbracia,
 VVhile Phyllis love made me the time delay.
 Besides my father Tbeus doth retain
 Ariadnes love and cherishes that flame;
 VVhen he looks towards heaven many times,
 See how my love (saith he) in heaven shines.
 Though Bacchus so forsake her did command him,
 The world for forsaking her, hath blam'd him.
 So am I perjur'd thought for my delay,
 Though Phyllis knew not the cause of my stay.

at length to return to Phyllis. He performed his promise, but Phyllis impatient of delay, had strangled her self before he came, and by the mercy of the gods was changed into a leafless Almond tree, which Demophoon embracing, it put forth leaves as if it had been sensible of his return. Which is fain'd, because Phyllis signifies in Greek an Almonds tree, so expressing the name of Phyllis. Because when Zephyrus or the West wind bloweth from Africa into Thrace, that tree flourisheth, for Zephyrus signifies as much as, ζενπόπος, that is, The West wind - which gave occasion to this fiction, that Phyllis transformed into a tree, seemed to rejoice, and flourish, at the return of her Love.

DEMOPHOON to PHILIS.

From his own Country to Phyllis his friend,
 Demophoon doth this his Letter send.
 Even thy rememb're that doth still love thee,
 My fortunes chang'd, but not my constancy.
 Thesee who e' name thou haft no cause to fear,
 Thy flame of love for his sake worthy were.
 Meleibea drove out of his royal state,
 And the old Tyrant is now dead of late.
 He that the Amazons had overcome,
 And unto Hercules was companion.
 He that did Min's son in law become,
 When he the Minotaure had overthrown.
 He did accuse me because I did stay,
 Trifling so long with thee in Thrace
 For while the love of Phyllis did detain thee.
 And that a sofreign beauty did entame thee.
 Time with a nimble pace did slip away;
 And sad accidents hapned by thy delay.
 Which had been all prevented, hadst thou come.
 Or hadst thou made them void, when they were d.
 When thou didst Phyllis kingdome love, for she
 Then a who'e kingdome was dearer to thee.

From

From Atthas I this same chiding have,
 And old Ebry who's halfe within her grave.
 Since Thesens is not their to close their eyes,
 The fault on me for staying with thee lies.
 I confesse they both to me often cry'd,
 VVhen my ship did in Thracian waters ride.
 The winos stand faire Domybass, why dost stay?
 Go home Dromophess without delay.
 From thy beloved Phyllis example take,
 She loves thee, yet her home she'll not forsake.
 She desires not to bear thee company,
 But to return again entreateth thee.
 I with a silent patience heard them chide,
 But their desire I in my thoughts deny'd.
 I thought I could not imbrace thee enough,
 And I was glad to see the sea grow rough.
 Before my father I will this confesse,
 "He that loves worthily may it professe,
 For since such store of worth remains in thee,
 If I do love thee it no shame can be.
 And I do know that Phyllis cannot say,
 I prov'd unkin'd, when I did sail away.
 For when the day came that I must take ship,
 I weep, and comforted thee who didst weep.
 Thou didst grant me a ship of Thrasia,
 VVhile Phyllis love made me the time delay.
 Besides my father Theses doth retain
 Ariadnes love and cherishes that flame;
 VVhen he looks towards heaven many times,
 See how my love (saith he) in heaven shines.
 Though Bacchus so forsake her did command him,
 The world for forsaking her, hath blam'd him.
 So am I perjur'd thought for my delay,
 Though Phyllis know not the cause of my stay.

This may assure thee I will come again,
 Because my breast doth burn with no new flame.
 Phyllis, hath not report sheo made known,
 What dismal troubles art speung up at home?
 Since for my fathers death I am mourner am,
 Whose death inteludes more grief then I can name,
 My brodier Hypatius deserves a tear,
 Whom his own horses did in pieces tear.
 These fatal causes might excuse my stay,
 yet after a while I will come away.
 I will but lay my F. to rest in the grave,
 For 'tis fit he shoule worthy burial have.
 Grant me but time and I will constaunce be,
 Thy Country yeilds must safety unto me.
 To those that since the fall of Troy did wander
 By land and sea, and padst through much danger,
 Troye hath been kind, and I unto this Land
 By tempeft drove, was kindly entertain'd.
 If that thy loues me remain the same,
 VVho in my royal Palace now do reign,
 And art not Angry with my parents fate,
 Or with D^respous misfortune?
 Suppose that unto me thou hadst been married
 VVhen at the siege of Troy ten years I started,
 Penelope through all the world is fam'd
 Because that she her selfe hath maintaynd
 For she with witty Arts did alwayes w^eave
 An unthriving web, fitter to dessive.
 For she by night did it impleas pull,
 Resolving the unwifed tweds to woff.
 Do^t fear the Trojans will not marry thee,
 Or wilt thou marry any one but me?
 Hast thou a heart with any one to join
 Thy han^t, unkle thy hand do join with mine;
 How

How wilt thou blush then, and how wilt thou grieve,
When a far off thou shalt my sailes perceive;
Thou wilt condemn thy self, and say alas;
I see Demophoon most faiul was.
Demophoon is return'd, and for my sake,
A dangerous voyage he by sea did make
I that for breach of faith him rashly blamed,
Have broke my faith, while I of him complained.
But Philius I had rather thou shouldest marry,
Then that thou shouldest some other way miscarry.
Why dost thou threaten thou wilt make away
Thy self? the gods may hear when thou dost pray.
Though thou doest blame me for inconstancy,
Add not affliction to my misery.
Though Theseus Ariadne did forsa^{ke}e,
Where he wild beasts a prey of her might make;
Yet my desert hath not been such, that I
Should be accused of inconstancy,
This Lener may the winds with out all fail
Bring safe to thee, which us'd to drive my sail,
Perswade thy self, I fain would come away,
But that I have just cause a while to stay.

The Argument of Sabines third Epistle.

THIS responsive Epistle written by Paris is not difficult, for the Argument is taken out of Oenone's Epistle. Paris having violated the rites of marriage, by repudiating his wife, and marrying Helena first confesses to Oenone the injury he had done her. Afterward excusing himself, he transferreth the blame on Cupid, whose power Lovers canno: resist, and on the fate who had destined Helena

Neles to him unknown. But tis reported that Oenone did love Paris so dearly, that he being brought to her wounded by Philoctetes with one of Hercules arrowes, she embrased his body, and embalmeing it with tears dyed over him, and so they were both buried in Cassandra a Trojan City.

PARIS to OENONE.

Nymp^h, I confess that I fit words do want,
To write an answer to thy just complaint.
I seek for words, but yet I cannot find,
VVords, that my aptly suite unto my mind.
I confess against thee I ha^ve offended,
yet Helen love makes me I cannot mend it.
I'll condemn my self, but what doth it avail;
The power of love makes a bad cause prevail
For though thou shouldest condemn me, and my cause,
yet Cupido means to try me by his lawes.
And if by his lawes we will judged be,
It seems another hath more right to me.
Thou w^ere my first love I confess in truth,
And I marri'd thee in my flowre of youth,
Of my father Pias I was not proud,
As thou do^st write, but unto thee I bow'd.
I did not think Hector should prove my brother,
VVhen thee and I did keep our flocks together.
I knew not my mother Queen Hecuba
VWhose Daughter thou most worthy art to be,
But love, I see, is not guided by reason,
Consider with thy self at this same season
For thou complain^s that I ha^ve wronged thee,
And yet thou writest that thou lovest me.
And though the Sirens and the Fayans do move thee,
yet thou remainest constant still unto me

Be-

Besides, this love is fatal unto me,
 My Sister Cassandra did it foresee;
 Before that I had heard of Heles name,
 Whole beauty through all Greece was known by fame.
 I have told all unlesse it be that wound,
 Of love which I have by her beauty found.
 Nay t'ose wounds I will open, and from you
 To gain some help, I will both beg and sue.
 My life and death are both within thy hand,
 you have conquer'd me, I'm at your command.
 yet I remember that when you heard me,
 Relate to you her di mal prophesie.
 While I did tell thee, thou didst weep upon me,
 Wishing the gods would turn that sad fate upon me.
 That thou mightst have no cause to accuse
 when that O ~~me~~ doth Perse lose.
 Love blinded me, that I could not believe thee,
 And loving thee doth make me now deceiye thee.
 Love powerful is, and when he list can turn
 To e to a bull, or to a Bird tranforme.
 Such beauty all the world should not contain,
 As Helen, who is born to be my flame.
 Since Jupiter to disguise his loose scape
 Did transforme himself unto a Swans shape;
 And Jove also descended from his Tower,
 To court fair Dione in a golden shoure.
 Sometimes himself he to an Eagle turn'd,
 And sometimes to a white Bull hath transform'd.
 And who would think that Hercules would spin,
 yet love of Dianira compell'd him.
 And he wore her light Peacocke 'tis said,
 While his love with his Lions skin was clad.
 So I remember love compelled thee,
 (The more's my fault) that thou preferredst me,

Before

Before Apollo love, and from him fled,
Because thou wouldest possess me marriage bed.
Yet I excel'd not Phœbus, but the dart
Of Love did so inforce thy gentle heart.
yet this may unto thee some comfort prove,
That she is no base Helen, whom I love,
For she whom I before thee do prefer
By birth is descended from Jupiter.
yet her birth doth not insom'rd make me,
But 'tis her matchl. He beauty that doth take me,
O my Oenone ! I do wish it still,
I had not been on the Idaean Hill
A judge of beauty, Pallas now doth grudge.
And Juno, because against them I did judge.
And because I did lovely Venus prale,
And for her beauty give to her the Bayes.
She that can raise loves flame up in another,
She that rules Cupid, and is his own Mother,
yet she could not avoid her own Sons shaft
And Bow, wherewith he wounded others oft.
For Vulcan took fair Venus close in bed
With Mars, which by the gods was witnessed.
And Mars again she afterward forsook,
And for her Paramour Archiles took,
For with Archiles she in love would be,
And did revenge his floath in venery.
If Venus thus did in affection rove,
Why may not she make Paris change his love?
Menelaus with her fair face was took,
I lov'd her, before on her I did look.
Though wars ensue, if I do her enjoy,
And a thousand ships fetch her back from Troy;
I do not fear the war is just and right,
If all the world should for her beauty fight.

Thought

Although the armed Grecians ready be,
 To fetch her back, I'le keep her here with me.
 If thou hast any hope to change my mind,
 To afe thy charmes why art thou not enclin'd?
 Since in Apollo's Arts thou art well seen,
 And to Hecates skill hast used been.
 Thou canst clou'd the day, and stars shinning clear,
 And make the Moon forsake her silver sphere;
 And by thy charmes, while I did Oxen keep,
 Fierce Lyons gent y wa k't among the sheep,
 Thou didst make Xanthes, and Simeiss flow
 Unto their spring, and back again to go.
 And charm'dst other Rivers, when, thou didst see,
 They thirsted after thy Virginini y.
 O Euane, let thy charmes effectual prove,
 To change my affection, or quench thy love.

Books

Bookes Printed for William Gilbertson, one is from the sign of the Bible in Gilt-spur-street, new Barn without Newgate.

The Faithfull Analyst or an Epitome of the English History, giving a true account of the Affairs of this Nation, from the building of the Tower of London in the dayes of William the Conqueror; to the Restoring of our Gracious King Charles the Second, where in all things remarkable both by Sea and Land, from the year, 1069. to the year. 1660 are truly and exactly repreſented.

The Rich Cabinet; with variety of Inventions: unlocked and opened, for the recreation of Ingenious spirits at their vacant hours; also variety of Recreative fire-works; both for Land, Air, and Water, whereunto is added Divers Experiments, in Drawing, Painting, Arithmetick, &c.

The History of Parisinus, and Parisimenes.

The History of Ornatius and Artesia.

The History of Dr. John Faustus. the first and second part.

The History of the Gentle Craft. the second part shewing what famous men have been Shoo-makers

Justin in Latin. Also Justin in English. Translated out of the four and forty books of Trojus

Although the armed Grecians ready be,
To fetch her back, I'le keep her here with me.
If thou hast any hope to change my mind,
To use thy charmes why art thou not enclin'd?
Since in Apollo's Arts thou art well seen,
And to Hecates skill hast used been.
Thou canst cloud the day, and stars shinning clear,
And make the Moon forfake her silver sphere;
And by thy charmes, while I did Oxen keep.
Fierce Lyans gent y wa k't among the sheep,
Thou didst make Xanthes, and Sinensis flow
Unto their spring, and back again to go.
And charm'dst other Rivers, when, thou didst see,
They thirsted after thy Virginini y.
Oceane, let thy charmes effectual prove,
To change my affection, or quench thy love.

Books

Booke Printed for William Gilbertson, at the signe of the Bible in Gilt-spur-street,
without Newgate.

The Faithfull Analyst or an Epitome of the English History, giving a true account of the Affairs of this Nation, from the building of the Tower of London in the dayes of William
the Conqueror; to the Restoring of our Gracious King Charles the Second, where in all things remarkable both by Sea and Land, from the year, 1069. to the year, 1660 are truly and exactly repreſented.

The Rich Cabinet; with variety of Inventions: unlocked and opened, for the recreation
of Ingenious spirits at their vacant hours; also
variety of Recreative fire-works; both for Land,
Air, and Water, whereunto is added Divers
Experiments, in Drawing, Painting, Arithmeticke, &c.

The History of Parisinus, and Parismenos.

The History of Ornatua and Artefia.

The History of Dr. John Faustus. the first and second part.

The History of the Gentile Craft. the second part shewing what famous men have been
Shoo-makers

Justin in Lattin. Also Justin in English.
Translated out of the four and forty books of Troghus

Books Printed for William Gilbertson, &c.

Troyes Pompeius containing the Affairs of ages and Countreys both in peace and war from the beginning of the world till the time of the Roum Emperors together with an Epitome of the Lives and Manners, Fitting to be used in Schools for the benefit of youth.

The Government of Cattle by Leonard Massal
Chief Farrier to King James.

The Surveyors Perambulator. A new book of Surveying of Land.

PLATS.

Tenoratus.

Dr. Faustus.

The Valiant Welchman.

Fair EM the Millets Daughter of Manchester.

GUY of Warwick

Lady Alymone.

The Merry Devil of Edmonton.

The Shoe-makers Holiday, or the Gentle-

Craft.

FINIS.

There are two constancies in love. one is from
The Eternal discoueries we make of new harm
In y object Beloved, y other is from a Qualitie
Of Honour not to be inconstant

That which make a Couerchellis Mistres Quene^r weary of Being Together is Because They are still speaking of themselves, & still good
Of Themselves

There is no Praise so great as what we give to Prowesse; yet great as its vertue is it cannot assure us of a just moderation of Guueness in our Tempers. Because its applied to man who is the most inconstant thing in Nature

I am Malade del amour

Leiden 1968

1068 g 30

2

OVIDS
HEROICALL

Epistles

Established by Mr. —

Veniam pro latr.

四

— same with the

Microtus pennsylvanicus

The 2d Ann:

The Journal

London. Printed for W. Gilbert, &c. et al.

But fortune that at last yet prove my friend,
And all my troubles may have a fair end.
A Prophet told me, dear wife, we should meet,
And with embraces should each-other greet,
But I will come disguised, so to be known
Unto no-other/but thy self alone.
In a beggers habit I'll disguised be,
Conceale thy joy, and knowledge then of me.
I'll shew no outward violence when I come
For so Apoll's Priest unto me fitt.
But I'll revenge my self even at that time
When thy wooers are banqueting with wine.
While beggers rayment doth Viesles cover.
And then at last my self I will discover.
While at Viesles they shall all admire.
That th's day would come soon I do desire.
That we may both dear wife, renew our love,
And I to thee may a thnd husband prove.

2011 ECONOMY

Chap. 14. "Longinus' Head and Hand."

1. Leucosia signata Meigen

Revised as of 2003-05-20
Version 2.0.0

ANSWERING THE QUESTIONS

1990-1991, 1991-1992, 1992-1993

19. Quercus rubra var. imbricaria W. M. Smith

Journal of Sabine (Graz), Ed. 2, 1

Argument of Sabotica versus Zupan. 3

heavies in this Epistle endeavours by divers Arguments to show — that it is not of advantage to the Epistles according alleging that his friends were offended with him.

so long with her in Thivare, and also the importance of the weather for sailing, promising however

NUMBER OF THE WORKERS FOR THE INDUSTRIES OF THE STATE OF N. Y.

N-3

at length to return to Phyllis. He performed his promise, but Phyllis impatient of delay, had strangled her self before he came, and by the mercy of the gods was changed into a leafless Almond tree, which Demophoon embracing, put forth leaves as if it had been sensible of his return. Which is fain'd, because Phyllis signifies in Greek an Almonds tree, so expressing the name of Phyllis. Because when Zephyrus or the West wind bloweth from Afrixe into Thrace, this tree flourisheth, for Zephyrus signifies as much as, Ζεφύρος, that is, The life or breath which gave occasion to this fiction, that Phyllis transformed into a Tree, seemed to rejoice, and flourish, at the return of her Lover.

DEMOPHOON to PHILIS.

From his own Country to Phyllis his friend,
Demophoon doth this his Letter send.
 Ev'n thy Amor that doth still love thee,
 My fortunes chang'd, but not my constancy.
 Theseus who e name thou hast no cause to fear,
 Thy flame of love for his sake worthy were.
Menelaeus drove out of his royal state,
 And the old Tyrant is now dead of late.
 He that the Amazons had overcome,
 And unto Hercules was companion.
 He that did Minos son in law become,
 When he the Minotaure had overthrown.
 He did accuse me because I did stay,
 Trailing so long with thee in Thrasie
 For while the love of Phyllis did disdain thee,
 And that a forreign beauty did enflame thee.
 Time with a nimble pace did slip away;
 And sad accidents hapned by thy delay.
 Which had been all prevented, hadst thou come
 Or hadst thou made them void, when they were d.
 When shou didst Phyllis kingdome love, for sh.
 Then a whole kingdome was dearer to thic.

From

From Athamas I this saine chiding have,
 And old Eurya who's halfe wistin her grave,
 Since Theseus is not their to close their eyes,
 The fault on me set stayng with thee lyes.
 I confessie they both to me often cry d,
 VVhen my ship did in Thracian waters ride.
 The wines stand faire Demophoon, why doft stay?
 Go home Demophoon without delay.
 From thy beloved Phyllis example take,
 She loves thee, yet her home she'l not forsake.
 She desires not to bear thee company,
 But to return againe entreath thee.
 I with a silent patience heard them chide,
 But their desire I in my thoughts deny'd.
 I thought I could not imbrace thee enough,
 And I was glad to see the sea grow rough.
 Before my father I will this confessie,
 "He that loves worthily may it professe.
 For since such store of worth remains in thee,
 If I do love thee it no shame can be.
 And I do know that Phyllis cannot say,
 I prov'd unkin'd, when I did sail away.
 For when the day came that I must take ship,
 I weep't, and commiser'd thee who didst weep.
 Thou didst grant me a ship of Thracia,
 VVhile Phyllis love made me the tyme delay.
 Besides my sa: her Theseus doth retain
 Ariadnes love and cherishes that flame,
 VVhen he looks towards heaven many times,
 see how my love (saith he) in heaven shines.
 Though Bacchus to forsake her did commend him,
 The world for forsaking her, hath blasp'd him.
 So am I perjur'd thought for my delay,
 Though Phyllis know not the cause of my stay.

This may assure thee I will come again,
 Because my breast doth burn with no new flame.
 Phyllis, hath not report to thee made known,
 What dismal troubles are sprung up at home?
 Since for my fathers death I a mourner am,
 Whose death includes more grief then I can name,
 My brother Hippolitus deserves a tear,
 Whom his own horses did in pieces tear,
 These fatall causes might excuse my stay,
 yet after a while I will come away.
 I will but say my F. c^r in the grave,
 For'tis sic he shoud worthy burial have.
 Grant me but time and I will constant be,
 Thy Country yeilds most safety unto me
 To those that since the fall of Troy did wander
 By land and sea, and pass through much danger,
Torace hath been kind, and I unto this Land
 By tempest drove, was kindly entertain'd.
 If that thy love to me remain the same,
 VVho in my royal Palace now do reign.
 And art not Angry with my parents fate,
 Or with D^r Isophaus most unfortunate?
 Suppose that unto me thou hadst been married
 VVhen at the siege of Troy ten years I carried.
 Penelope through all the world is fam'd
 Because that she her chastity maintain'd.
 For she with witty Art, did always weare
 An unthriving web, fitter to deceive.
 For she by night did it in pieces pull,
 Resolving the untwisted threads to wold.
 Do'st fear the Trojans will not marry thee,
 Or wilt thou marry any one but me?
 Hast thou a heart with any one to join
 Thy han^t, unless thy hand do join with mine;

How

How wilt thou blush then, and how wilt thou grieve,
When a far off thou shalt my sailes perceive;
Thou wilt condemn thy self, and say alas;
I see Demophoon most faiul was.
Demophon is return'd, and for my sake,
A dangerous voyage he by sea did make
I that for breach of faith him rashly blamed,
Have broke my faith, while I of him complained.
But Phœnix I had rather thou shouldest marry,
Then that thou shouldest some other way miscarry.
Why doft thou threaten thou wilt make away
Thy self? the gods may hear when thou doft pray.
Though thou doft blame me for inconstancy,
Add not affliction to my misery.
Though Thesrus Aristede did forfa^te,
Where he wild beasts a prey of her might make;
Yet my desert hath not been such, that I
Should be accused of inconstancy,
This Leuer may the wids wi^t out all fall
Bring safe to t^e ee, which us'd to drive my sail,
Perswade thy self, I fain would come away,
But that I have just cause a while to stay.

The Argument of Sabine's third Epistle.

His resolute Epistle written by Paris is not difficult; for the Argument is taken out of Odysseus Epistle. Paris having violated the rites of marriage, by repudiating his wife, and marrying Helen first confesses to Odysseus the injury he had done her. Afterward excusing himself, he transferreth the blame on Cupid, whose power Lovers cannot resist, and on the fate who had destined

Helena to him unknowne. But tis reported that Oenone did love Paris so dearly, that he being brought to her wounded by Philoctetes with one of Hercules arowes, she embrased his body, and embalming it with tears dyed over him, and so they were both buried in Oenone's
Trojan City.

PARIS to OENONE.

Nympke, I confess that I fit words do wanke,
To write an answer to thy just complaint.
I seek for words, but yet I cannot find,
VVords, that my aptly suite unto my mind.
I confess against thee I have offended,
yet Helen loves me, as me I cannot mend it.
I'le condemn my self, but what doth it avail,
The power of love makes a bad cause prevail
For though thou shouldest condemn me, and my cause,
yet Cupid means to try me by his lawes.
And if by his lawes we will judged be,
It seems another hath more right to me.
Thou wert my first love I conteine in truthe,
And I marri'd thee in my flowre of youth.
Of my father Priam I was not proud,
As thou do'st write, but unto thee I bow'd.
I did not think Hector should prove my brother,
VVhen thee and I did keep our stoccks together.
I knew not my mother Queen Hecuba
VVhole Daughter thou most worthy art to be,
But love, I see, is not guided by reason,
Consider with thy self at this same season
For thou complain'st that I have wronged thee,
And yet thou writest that thou lovest me.
And though the Syres and the Fawnes do move thee,
yet thou remaineſt constant still unto me.

Be.

Bendes, this love is fatal unto me,
 My Sister Cassandra did it foresee;
 Before that I had heard of Helens name,
 Whose beauty through all Greene was known by fame.
 I have told all unlesse it be that wound,
 Of love which I have by her beauty found.
 Nay these wounds I will open, and from you
 To gain some help, I will both beg and sue.
 My life and death are both within thy hand,
 you have conquer'd me, I'm at your command.
 yet I remember that when you heard me,
 Relate to you her di'mal prophesie.
 While I did tell thee, thou didst weep upon me,
 VVishing the gods would turn that sad fate upon me.
 That thou m' g' st have no cause to accuse
 When that O ^{none} doth P ^{ris} lose.
 Love blinded me, that I could not believe thee,
 And loving thee doth make me now deceive thee.
 Love powerful is, and when he list can turn
 Jo ^e to a bull, or to a Bird transorme.
 Such beauty all the world should not contain,
 As Helen, who is born to be my flame.
 Since Jupiter to disguise his loose scape
 Did transforme himself unto a Swans shape;
 And Jove also descended from his Tower,
 To court fair Danee in a golden showre.
 Sometimes himself he to an Eagle turn'd,
 And sometimes to a white Bull hath transform'd.
 And who would think that Hercules would spin,
 yet love of Dianira compell'd him.
 And he wore her Ight Petticoate 'tis said,
 While his love with his Lions skin was clad,
 So I remember love compelled thee,
 (The more's my fault) that thou preferredst me;

Before

Before Apollo love, and from him fled,
Because thou wouldest not possesse my marriage bed.
Yet I excel'd not Phœbus, but the dart
Of Love did so inforce thy gentle heart.
yet this may unto thee some comfort prove,
That she is no base Harlot whom I love,
For she whom I before thee do prefer
By birth is descended from Jupiter.
yet her birth doth not inamour'd make me,
But 'tis her matchl. sic beauty that doth take me.
O my Oenone ! I do wish it still,
I had not been on the Idean Hill
A judge of beauty, Pallas now doth grudge.
And Juno, because against them I did judge,
And because I did lovely Venus praise,
And for her beauty gave to her the Bayes.
She that can raise loves flame up in another,
She that rules Cupid, and is his own Mother.
yet she could not avoid her own Sons shaft
And Bow, wherewith he wounded others oft.
For Vulcan took fair Venus close in bed
With Mars, which by the gods was witnessed.
And Mars again she afterward forlook,
And for her Paramour Antebyes took.
For with Antebyes she in love would be,
And did revenge his death in venery.
If Venus thus did in affection rove,
Why may not she make Paris change his love?
Menelaus with her fair face was took,
I lov'd her, before on her I did look.
Though wars ensue, if I do her enjoy,
And a thousand ships fetch her back from Troy;
I do not fear the war is just and right,
If all the world should for her beauty fight.

Thought

Although the armed Grecians ready be,
To fetch her back, I'le keep her here with me.
If thou haft any hope to change my mind,
To use thy charmes why art thou not enclin'd?
Since in Apollo's Arts thou art well seen,
And to Hecates skill haft used been.
Thou canst cloud the day, and stars thinning clear,
And make the Moon forlacke her silver sphere;
And by thy charmes, while I did Oxen keep,
Fierce Lyons gent y wa k't among the sheep.
Thou didst make Xanthus, and Simois flow
Unto their springs, and back again to go.
And charm'dst other Rivers, when, thou didst see,
They thirsted after thy Virginini y.
Oenone, let thy charmes effectual prove,
To change my affection, or quench thy love.

Books

Bookes Printed for William Gilbertson, at the sign of the Bible in Gilt-spur-street,
without Newgate.

The Faithfull Analist or an Epitome of the English History, giving a true account of the Affairs of this Nation, from the building of the Tower of London in the dayes of William
the Conqueror; to the Restoring of our Gracious King Charles the Second, where in all things remarkable both by Sea and Land, from
the year, 1069. to the year. 1660 are truly and exactly represented.

The Rich Cabinet; with variety of Inventions: unlocked and opened, for the recreation
of Ingenious spirits at their vacant hours; also
variety of Recreative fire-works; both for Land,
Air, and Water, whereunto is added Divers
Experiments, in Drawing, Painting, Arithmetick, &c.

The History of Parisinus, and Parisimenos.

The History of Ornatius and Artefia.

The History of Dr. John Faustus. the first and second part.

The History of the Gentle Crafts. the second part shewing what famous men have been
Shoo-makers

Justin in Lattin. Also Justin in English.
Translated out of the four and forty books of

Trogus

Books Printed for William Gilbertson, &c.

Troyus Pompas containing the Affairs of all ages and Countreys both in peace and war from the beginning of the world till the time of the Roman Emperors together with an Epitome
of the lives and Manners, fitting to be used in
Schools for the benefit of youth.

The Government of Cattle by Leonard Massall
Chief Farier to King James.

The Surveyors Perambulator, A new book of Surveying of Land.

P.L.A.T.S.

Ignoramus.

Dr. Faustus.

The Valiant Welshman.

Fair EM the Millers Daughter of Man- chester.

GUY of Warwick

Lady Alymony.

The Merry Devil of Edmonton.

The Shoe-makers Holiday, or the Gentle-
Craft.

